EDITOR'S PREFACE.

THE Text of the following work is taken principally from a collation of three MSS., which are referred to in the Notes by the letters D., B., and L.

1. The first of these, denoted by D., is a miscellaneous volume, containing various tracts and fragments of the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries; it was formerly in the possession of the celebrated antiquaries, Duaid Mac Firbis and Edward Lhwyd, whose autographs it possesses; and it is now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, Class II., Tab. 3. No. 17.

The volume contains a copy of the celebrated code of Brehon Laws called the Seanchus Mor^a, with a copious gloss of great value. This is followed by several other tracts and fragments of tracts on Brehon Law, of different dates, and by various scribes, some of whom have given their names.

After

nity College, see Dr. Petrie's Essay on Tara Hill, in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. xviii. pp. 71-80.

After the Law Tracts follow several miscellaneous pieces on historical and religious subjects, short anecdotes of Irish saints, poems, and historical romantic tales. Of these the most curious are : 1. The tract called Seanchur na pelec, or the History of the Cemeteries, containing an account of the most celebrated burial-places of the Pagan Irish ; 2. The History of the plebeian Tribes called Aitheach Tuatha, who were subjugated by King Tuathal Teachtmair, in the second century of the Christian era ; 3. A List of the ancient Tales or historical Romances which were wont to be recited by the Bards at Entertainments, in presence of Kings and Chieftains ; 4. A List of the celebrated Women of Antiquity ; with many other tales, tracts, genealogies, and poems, of the greatest value for the illustration of Irish history, language, and topography.

The copy of the Leabhar Breathnach, or British Book, contained in this MS., occurs in p. 806^b, and was probably written in the fourteenth, or early part of the fifteenth century.

This is the copy of the Irish version of the Britannia of Nennius, which has been made the basis of the text of the following work, and is denoted by D. in the notes. Its errors, however, have been corrected, as far as the Editor was able to correct them, by collation with the other MSS. to which he had access ; and such interpolations as occurred in the other MSS., when judged of any value, have been inserted in their proper places. All these deviations from the text of D. have been mentioned in the notes.

2. The second MS. (denoted by B.) is the copy of the Irish Nennius, which is contained in the Book of Ballymote, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, written in the fourteenth century.

The

Or rather column 806. The MS. is written some parts of it in double columns and some parts not : the whole has been paged by Edward Lhwyd, each column, wherever columns occurred, being counted for a page.

The order of the sections in this MS. differs considerably from that of D., and it also contains several interpolations. The Editor has numbered the sections in the printed text of the work, in order to enable him with greater facility to refer to them.

The order of the copy in the Book of Ballymote is as follows : It begins with the section Ego Nemius, marked sect. i. p. 25, infra. Then follows the chapter "On the Origin of the Cruithnians," which has been given in the Additional Notes, No. XX., p. xci. After which follow sections II., III., and IV., as in the printed text.

After section IV. this MS. interpolates the prose account, sections XXVII. and XXVIII., followed by the poem on the Origin and History of the Picts or Cruithnians, which has been published section XXX. p. 126, infra.

Then follow sections V. to XIV., inclusive, in the same order as in the text ; but after section XIV. is interpolated the Legend of St. Cairnech, which will be found in the Appendix, No. I., p. 178.

After this we have the history of the Saxon conquest, sect. XV. ; the miracles of St. German, sects. XVI., XVII. ; and the story of Ambrose Merlin and the Druids, sects. XVIII., XIX. ; followed by the history of the wars of Gortimer (or Gortighern, as he is called in this copy), sects. XX. to XXIV., inclusive, in the same order as in the text.

At the end of this last section recording the battles of Arthur, and briefly noticing the conversion of the Saxons to Christianity, the copy of this work in the Book of Ballymote ends ; and its completion is notified by the words $\text{Finit } \text{do'n } \text{Breathnochas}$, which are literally "Finit to the Breathnochas," where the scribe evidently wrote Finit for Finis. It appears also from this note that the title then given to this book was "The Breathnochas," which would be equivalent to Britanismus, if we may be permitted to coin such a word.

3. The next authority which has been employed in the formation of the text is the copy of this work in the Book of Lecan, a MS. written in the year 1417^c. To this copy is prefixed, but in a more recent hand, the title $\text{\textsc{Λεαββαρ δρεατ}nach \text{\textsc{α}νηρο ρυρ}$, which has been adopted in the title page of the present volume, and which expresses what the Irish understood by the Latin titles, “Eulogium Britanniae,” and “Historia Britonum.”

This copy, which is denoted by L. in the notes, begins with sect. II., Britannia insula, &c., p. 27, infra, omitting the list of British cities. Then follows the chapter on the origin of the Picts, which will be found in the Additional Notes, No. XX. p. xciii. Section III. is omitted altogether, and then follow sects. IV. to VIII., inclusive. Sections IX. and X. are omitted in this place. Then comes the account of the adventures of the Gaedhíl, sects. XI. to XV., inclusive^d, followed by another copy of the history of Roman and Saxon Britain, sects. VI., VII., VIII., which is headed, $\text{\textsc{Οο ρεαν}cυρ \text{\textsc{δ}ρεατ}an \text{\textsc{α}νηρο βο}deαρτα$, “Of the history of Britain, here follows;” but the title prefixed to sect. VIII., in the former copy of this chapter, is omitted here.

Then follow sects. IX., X., with the title $\text{\textsc{Οο ζαβαλα}b \text{\textsc{ε}ρ}enn \text{\textsc{α}μα}l \text{\textsc{μ}νηρεαρ} \text{\textsc{Nem}υρ} [sic] \text{\textsc{α}νηρο}$, as in the text, p. 42. After which comes another copy of the history of the adventures of the Gaedhíl, sects. XI.–XIV., with the title $\text{\textsc{Οο ι}m\text{\textsc{τ}heach}ταb \text{\textsc{ζ}αι}θεαl \text{\textsc{α}νηρο βο}υl\text{\textsc{τ}α}$; but a portion of sect. XIV. is wanting after the words $\text{\textsc{τ}υ}g\text{\textsc{λ}ατ}αρ \text{\textsc{λε}ο} \text{\textsc{ια}ρ}θαν \text{\textsc{τ}α}ρe\text{\textsc{χ}θ}ου$, p. 72, line 9.

About

^c This date may be collected from the MS. itself. See also Mr. O'Donovan's note to the Annals of the Four Masters, at the year 1417.

^d The account of the sons of Cruithne, in section x., differs considerably in this copy from that given above, p. 50. See Additional Notes, No. XX., p. xciv., where the more important variations are noticed.

About ten leaves are here wanting in the Book of Lecan, which is now preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, although it originally belonged to Trinity College^e, where nine of the missing leaves were discovered by Mr. Curry, bound up with other MSS., (Class II. Tab. 2. No. 17). One leaf, however, which contained the continuation of sect. XVI. is lost, and the next page begins with the words $\text{ip m lon\u00f1eap pm \u03c4am\u0312 a n\u0312eac co h-\u0399n\u0312\u03c4, p. 84, l. 16, to the end of sect. XVII.}$

Then follows the account of Dun Ambrose and of the contest of Ambrose Merlin with the Druids, sects. XVIII. XIX.; then the wars of Gortimer or Gortighern, sect. XX. to XXII., with the short account of St. Patrick, sect. XXIII., and the remainder of the history of the Saxons from the death of Gortighern (sect. XXIV.) to their conversion to Christianity.

This was also regarded by the scribe who copied the Book of Lecan as the conclusion of the work, for he has written the word pm\u0312 at the end of sect. XXIV. But there follow immediately the tracts on the wonders of Britain, sect. XXV., and on the wonders of the isle of Man, sect. XXVI.

After this begins what seems to have been intended as a new edition of the work^f. It commences with the chapter Ego Nemius, sect. I., followed by the chapter on the origin of the Picts, which has been given in the Additional Notes, No. XX., p. xc.

Then

^e The Book of Lecan is entered among the MSS. of Trinity College in the Catalogus Manuscriptorum Angliæ et Hiberniæ, published at Oxford, 1697 (No. 117, p. 22), and still bears the Library marks, D. 19. It was carried off in the reign of James II. to Paris, but was restored to Ireland at the instance of General Vallan-cey, and by him deposited in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy. See O'Reilly, Trans. Ibero-Celtic Society, p. cxvii.; Mac Geoghegan, Hist. d'Irlande, tom. i. p. 39.

^f This new edition appears, from its contents, to have had special reference to Pictish history.

Then follows "Britannia insula," &c., sect. ii., with the list of cities, and sections iii. iv., as far as the words m'c l'ap'eth, p. 32, line 11.

Next we have the account of the origin of the Picts (sects. xxvii. to xxix., inclusive), with the title *Do Chpu'nech'ab an'p'eo, do peip na n-eol'ach. Section xxix., containing the account of the manner in which the Picts, after their settlement in North Britain, obtained their women from the Milesians of Ireland, is peculiar to the Book of Lecan.

Then follows the poetical account of the Picts, sect. xxx., wanting, however, the last two stanzas.

With this poem the second copy of the Irish Nennius in the Book of Lecan concludes.

4. A fragment of this work is also to be found in the remains of the Leabhar na h-Uidhri, preserved in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy. It begins on the first page of the second leaf now remaining in that MS., with the words ac't ceana ol pe, &c., p. 94, line 15, and concludes at the end of sect. xxiv., which in this MS. was also the termination of the work. This fragment is referred to in the notes, pp. 95-113, by the letter U. The Leabhar na h-Uidhri is a MS. of the twelfth century.

5. Another copy of the Leabhar Breathnach is to be found in the Book of Hy-Many, or the Book of the O'Kellys, as it is called by O'Reilly, a MS. of the early part of the fifteenth century, transcribed by Faelan Mac an Gabhan, whose death is recorded by the Four Masters at the year 1423. This MS. is not now accessible to Irish scholars in Dublin, and it has not been possible to consult it for the present work, although it is believed to be in existence in the possession of a private collector in England. In O'Reilly's time it belonged to Sir William Betham.

We

* See p. 120, note †.

We learn from O'Reilly^h, that at the commencement of this copy of the work there is or was "a memorandum," stating "that Nennius was the author, and that Giolla Caoimhghin translated it into Scotie."

Giolla Caoimhghin died about A. D. 1072, or shortly after, as has been inferred from his chronological poem, beginning Uimhlaith anall uile, which brings down the series of events to that year.

If, therefore, he is to be taken as the original translator of Nenniusⁱ, we may probably fix the middle of the eleventh century as the earliest period at which the "Historia Britonum" appeared in an Irish version.

In its original form, the work, as we have seen, terminated at the end of sect. xxiv.; and all that follows must be regarded as subsequent interpolations, although, probably, added at the same period as the translation or edition, put forth by Giolla Caoimhghin.

The first of these additions contains the section on the Wonders of the Island of Britain, and that on the Wonders of the Isle of Man. This is also found added to some copies of the Latin of Nennius^k, with a chapter, omitted in all the Irish copies, on the Wonders of Ireland.

The tract on the history of the Picts (sects. xxvii.—xxix.), with the curious poem (sect. xxx.), now for the first time printed, is also to be regarded as an addition made to the original work. The Book of Ballymote, although it omits the Mirabilia, has preserved these sources of Pictish history, of which the prose portion was known to Pinkerton, through a very faulty transcript, and still more erroneous

ⁱ Mr. Herbert, however, has shown that there is some reason to attribute the first attempt at a translation of the Historia to an earlier author.—See his remarks, Introd. p. 21.

neous translation, but the poem appears to have escaped his notice. Although the text is corrupt in many places, in both the MSS. that have been employed in editing it, yet it is hoped that its publication, even in the imperfect state in which we have it, will be regarded as a service of some value to the student of Scottish history.

The next interpolation or addition is an Irish version of the document already known to the readers of Innes and Pinkerton, under the title of the “Chronicon Pictorum.” This curious fragment occurs only in the manuscript D.; but another copy of it has been given in the Additional Notes^l, from a MS. in the Bodleian Library^m which preserves a considerable fragment of the Psalter of Cashel, and evidently contained formerly a copy of the Leabhar Breathnach, or Irish version of Nennius, of which the leaf containing the Pictish Chronicle is now the only remnant.

Next follows (sect. xxxiii. p. 168), an abridged translation of the beginning of the history of the Venerable Bede. This document occurs also immediately after the Pictish Chronicle, in the Bodleian MS. It is of very little value, but as it appears to have been connected with the work, and to have been regarded as a part of it in the manuscript D, which has been principally followed, it was thought right to include it in the present volume.

The Appendix contains some other documents of the same kind, not so immediately connected with the Leabhar Breathnach in any of the MSS., but tending to illustrate the history to which it relates, and the traditions prevalent at the period when it was compiled. The first of these documents is the Legend of St. Cairnech, which,

^m See an account of this MS., by the Editor, in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, vol. ii. p. 33; and some

as we have seen, occurs only in the Book of Ballymote, having been interpolated in the copy of the Irish Nennius there preserved, immediately after the account of the final conquest of Britain by the Romans. It relates to the history of the sixth century, although it is evidently a compilation of a much later period.

The next document inserted in the Appendix is an account of the Wonders of Ireland, chiefly from the Book of Ballymote. This tract is not without interest, as a curious collection of ancient fables and traditions, not very unlike the celebrated Otia imperialia of Ger-vase of Tilbury, and compiled probably about the same period. It proves, incidentally, that the stories of Irish wonders told by Giraldus Cambrensis, for which Lynch has so severely, and, as it appears, so unjustly censured him, were not his own inventions, but copied, with some embellishments of his own, from the genuine traditions of the Irish people.

The poem of Maelmura of Fathain, on the history of the Milesian or Gadelian invasion of Ireland, is now published for the first time, and it was thought worth while to add to it the contemporaneous poem on the history of the Albanian Scots, known under the name of the "Duan Albanach," although this latter poem has already been published by Pinkerton, by Doctor O'Connor, and more recently by Mr. Skene, in the "Collectanea de Rebus Albanicis," edited by the Iona Club.

Thus the present work will be found to contain three specimens of the bardic sources of British and Irish history, written, one of them in the ninth, and the others probably in the eleventh century, containing the traditions, as they were then currently received, of the origin of the Pictish and Milesian tribes, and the succession of the early kings of Scotland. Two of these poems are now published for the first time; and the third is presented to the reader in, it is hoped, a very much more correct version than those which accompanied the former publications of it.

In conclusion, the Editor has to acknowledge his very great obligations to Mr. O'Donovan and Mr. Curry, for the invaluable assistance they have afforded him throughout the following work. Without them he could not have executed it; and to them he is indebted for the greater part of the historical and topographical information which is collected in the notes. For many valuable references to ancient Glossaries, and other MSS., containing philological and historical illustrations of obscure or obsolete words and phrases, he is specially indebted to Mr. Curry.

The Editor has preserved the orthography of the original, without any attempt at correction, or even at uniformity; and in the case of proper names, he has retained, even in the English translation, the spelling of the Irish. This seemed necessary, in order to give the English reader a fair representation of the age to which the original belongs. Thus the Picts are called Cruithnians; the Gaels, Gaedhil; Ireland, Eri; and Scotland, Albaⁿ.

The Notes marked (H.) have been contributed by Mr. Herbert. For those marked (T.) the Editor is responsible.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Irish MS. of which a translation is here given professes to be, and after a fashion is, translated from the Historia Britonum by Nennius. Little is known of that author (if not rather, editor), and, as usual, the less we know the more we are obliged to say; for knowledge soon tells its tale.

That the Historia Britonum sometimes bears the name of Gildas, may be sufficiently accounted for by these circumstances: that the first genuine tractate of St. Gildas, concerning the Britons, was commonly called his Historia; and that a fabulous history of the Britons was formerly extant under that name. But it can be further explained by the nature of that title, for name indeed it is not, but an Irish title, so liberally bestowed upon the religious and learned, that Dr. C. O'Connor said there were not less than 1000 persons adorned with it. Script. Rerum Hib. 1, 198. Therefore, when we have shewn its original author to be closely connected with Ireland, we shall have removed any wonder at his being entitled Gildas. Its total dissimilitude to the works of St. Gildas of Ruiz is apparent; and it also differs in its contents^a, and in some portion of its spirit, from that other fabulous history which is cited with admiration in Geoffrey of Monmouth by the name of Gildas. Its printed editions are by T. Gale, Oxon, 1691; by C. Bertram, jointly with St. Gildas, and a production given by him to the world under the name of Ricardus Corinæus, Copenhagen, 1757, in the title, and 1758 in the colophon; by the same, with 1758 in the title, and without colophon, which edition I have never seen; by W. Gunn, B. D., London, 1819; and by Jos. Stevenson, London, 1838.

The Historia Britonum^b had two or more publishers in succession. That is to say, transcribers of it made more or less of change and addition; and sometimes took no pains to inform the world that they were mere transcribers, and not the authors. The edition rendered into Irish is that by Nemius, styling himself a disciple of St. Elbod or Elbodug, and styling the priest Beulan his master. Some copies have a long Prologus, which declares that he published his work "in A. D. 858, being the twenty-fourth year of Mervyn, King of the Britons." Mervyn Vrych or the Speckled, King of Man in his own right, and of Wales in that of Essyllt his queen, reigned over the latter country from 818 to his death in 843. See Powell's Cambria,

^a As to its contents, the matters cited by Geoffrey were there related satis prolixè; therefore they were no casual paragraphs, missing out of our MSS. Galfrid. lib. i. cap. 17, ii. cap. 17. And as to its spirit, it evidently sought to magnify the Britons at the expense of the Romans, from which temper our Historia is nearly exempt; iv. cap. 3. It is not cited by name in cap. 4, but the identity of the sources is pretty obvious. I know not whether the references to Gildas are by

Geoffrey, a free translator, or by his original. In i. cap. 17, the Welch copy called Tysilio omits the reference, p. 116. But in ii. cap. 17, it quotes Gildas by name, p. 139. Neither can we say with entire certainty in what language it was; but probably in Latin.

^b The Archdeacon of Huntingdon in one place cites it as quidam author, and in another as Gildas Historiographus. Henr. Hunt. p. 301-13, in Script. post Bedam, Franc. 1601.

pp. 24-8; Warrington, 1, pp. 205-10; Brut y Tywysogion, pp. 475-8. He alone of that name was Rex Britonum; though Mervyn, third son of Rodri Mawr, held Powys from 873 to 877^c. The year 858 fell fifteen years after his death; which argument would prove the forgery of the Prologus, were it not for the ignorance, then so prevalent, of the current year of our Lord. It is, however, a mere swelling out and amplification of the shorter prologue, in a bombastic phraseology which Nennius did not employ, and it is not credible that both are genuine. But the shorter prologue, or Apologia, is to be received as genuine. It begins, as in the Irish version, "Ego Nennius Sancti Elbodi discipulus aliqua excerpta scribere curavi," &c.; but it is interpolated from the longer prologue, and otherwise altered, in that version. It is to be received, first, from the absence of internal evidence to its prejudice; secondly, from the absence of internal evidence. And I wonder that Mr. Stevenson should urge, for such, that it occurs not in MSS. anterior to the twelfth century; when from his own shewing we collect, that there exists only one MS. anterior to circeiter 1150; one, not two, for the MS. of Marcus Anachoreta could not contain it, and is not strictly to the purpose. The document cannot suffer from the silence of MSS. that do not exist. Thirdly, there is no motive for the forgery. Great or even well-known names have been assumed, in order to give currency to fictions; such as Orpheus, Berosus, Ovid, Tully, Ossian, and (if you please) Gildas. But Nennius was nobody at all, his name does not exist elsewhere, and no other works belong to him. What was to be gained by inventing his name? The fabricator of a work may invent an ideal author for it. But here we must suppose, that the genuine work of some other man was by forgery ascribed to a Nobody, to an unknown person, claiming no rank or distinction, and made to avow his modern date.

^c Brut y Tywysog, p. 481-2. Others give other years; but the question is not relevant.

date. The rejection of this document would therefore appear to me uncritical, and needlessly destructive of fact and document. Falsehood is most usually built upon a basis of truth; and the Apologia or lesser prologue was the substratum upon which the larger one was erected. That fiction was, however, partly founded upon the contents of the book itself, which, in cap. xi. Gale, p. 14, Stevenson, purports to be published in A. D. $437 + 418 + 3 = 858$; and in the same chapter makes mention, though irrelevantly to that date, of King Mervyn, and of the fourth year (not the twenty-fourth) of his reign. Such are the sources of the false Prologus.

The name, which Geoffrey, Archdeacon of Monmouth, writes Nennius, is Nynniaw or Nynyaw in all the Welch copies of the chronicles. But it is not a name, whereof the etymon or significaney appears. Those chronicles have a legend, that one Nennius was brother of Cassivellaunus, fought against Cæsar, and took his sword from him, slew Labienus, but died himself of his wounds in fifteen days after. Galfrid. Monmet. iv. cap. 3-4; Brut Tysilio. &c. p. 173-6. To connect those statements with our historians would have exceeded all effrontery, but that of John Bale. That centuriator maintains, that Nennius, brother of Cassivellaunus, wrote a beautiful history of the origin and progress of the Britons, which another Nennius, Abbot of Bangor, translated into Latin and continued. Cent. 1. fol. 13, fol. 36, 7th ed. 1548. Mr. Gunn's observation, that Nennius is described by Geoffrey, i. cap. 17, iv., cap. 3 and 4, and by Tysilio, Coll. Cambr. pp. 30 and 75, as a British historian, was made inadvertently, being at variance with the fact. Gunn's Preface, p. 19. Geoffrey's author makes no allusion to Nennius the historiographer; though he has borrowed things, either from the Historia, or from sources common to both. This name (written Ninnius and Ninius in some copies) is in all probability the same as that of Ninia, the Apostle of the South Piets, and founder of the Church of Candida Casa, so called by

William of Malmesbury, and Nynia by Alcuin and Beda. Vide Ussher, Brit. Eccles. p. 161, or ed. ii. p. 137. Ninianus has been his common appellation among subsequent writers. He had a brother, St. Plebeias. Johan. Timmuth, ap. Ussher addenda, p. 1059, or ed. ii. p. 506. Two kings were said in the Welch mythologies to have formerly reigned over part of South Wales, and to have been transformed into oxen for their sins. Their names were Nynniaw and Peibiaw. See Mabinogi of Killwch, p. 281; note, p. 351. Some genealogies of King Arthur include the name of this Nynniaw. From Nynniaw and Peibiaw, John of Timmouth, or those to whom he was indebted, probably derived the idea of the brother saints Nynniaw and Plebiaw. St. Finnian of Maghbile was sent in his youth to a place in Britain called Magnum Monasterium, by John of Timmouth. Rosnat, Alba, and Monasterium Albium, in Colgan. A. SS. i. pp. 438-9, and civitas quæ dicitur Candida in Colgan, ib. 634. Its abbot is styled Monennus, Monennius, Nennius, and Nennio. Colg. ib. Ussher, p. 954 or 494. But Finnian's instructor at Candida is called by his biographer, and in ancient hymns, Mugentius. Colg. ib. 634. In the life of St. Eugenius he is called Nennio, qui Mancenus dicitur, de Rosnatensi monasterio. Colg. ib. p. 430. num. 4. Dr. Lanigan concluded that Mo-nennius or Nennio was no other than Ninia, the founder of Candida Casa, who was confounded with the existing abbot, by reason of its being called his monastery. See Lanigan's Eccles. Hist. i, 437, ed. ii. The address of Alcuin's epistle was, Ad Fratres S. Niniani de Candidâ Casâ. Besides the coincidence of candida and alba, it might have been added that the Gaelic name Rosnat, promontory of learning, agrees with the Whithern or Whithorn, candidum cornu, of the Northumbrians. Of the various Irish saints named Ninnidh or Nainnidh, and sometimes Latinized into Nennius, I take no account, as they belong to another nation; and it is uncertain if it be the same name, the more so as the Gaelic appellation of St. Ninia is Ringen or Ringan. Ussher, p. 661; Chalmers's Caledonia, i. 135. Nor do the Irish copies of the Historia seem to recognize the name of Nemius, as having a known equivalent; for they give it, Nummus, Nemnus, Nemnius, Neimnus, Nemonus, and Nenammis. I do not know if the name in question hath any historical instances, besides those of the Apostle of the Picts and our historian.

His discipleship unto St. Elbod now demands consideration. The four chronicles annexed to that of the kings of Britain do not clearly define Elbod's date. He is said to have flourished in 755 and 770. Brut y Tywysog. p. 473, p. 391. Warrington fixes his appointment to the primacy of North Wales (seated at Bangor) about A. D. 762. The Bonedd y Saint, p. 42, says that he was son of Cowlwyd, and bishop [of Caergybi^d or Holyhead] in 773. He died in 800, according to the Brut y Tywysog. p. 392, and John Brechva, p. 474; and in 809 according to the Brut y Saeson, p. 474; Brut y Tywysog. ibid. The Annals of St. David's, carried down to 1285, say, anno 770, Pascha mutatur apud Britones emendante Elbodu homine Dei; and A. D. 811, Ellodu (sic) episcopus Venedotie obiit. Anglia Sacra, 11, p. 648. The date of 755 related to North Wales, and this of 770 perhaps relates to South Wales; another South-Welchman, Ieuan Brechva, quotes it. Elbodu (whence Elvodugus) is no doubt Elbod Ddu, i. e. Elbod the Black, meaning either swarthy or black-haired. Godwin, in his book de Præsulibus, has not numbered him among the bishops of Bangor, which he might have done. He seems, by these accounts, to have been in activity towards the middle of the eighth century, and to have departed this life in the first, or ninth, or at latest eleventh year of the ninth century. But the book of Nennius exhibits the date of A. D. 858, in its eleventh chapter, as being the third year of the existing cycle of nineteen years or forty-fifth cycle from the Nativity, and the actually current year. His professed acquaintance with the Roman annalists and chronographers, and with those of the Angli, which must include Beda himself, and his computation of it by the Paschal cycles, give to his statement of the annus Domini a credit, which is wanting to quotations of that era by other editors of the Historia Britonum; and in the same sentence he correctly states, that St. Patrick visited Ireland in the twenty-third cycle^e. Therefore I believe him not to have been far, if at all wrong; and to have written in the reign of Rodri Mawr. Nennius was also an author not far advanced in years, for his magister or teacher, Beulan, was not only living, but still actively influencing his conduct. Therefore there appears a disparity of date between Elbod and his disciple.

But I do not deduce from his words, that Nennius did learn under Elbod or Elbodu, or even that he was born when that person died. Mere individuals can have only personal disciples; but founders of a rule, like Benedict, or of a doctrine, like Arius, are said to have disciples in those who espouse their systems. Now St. Elbod was the author of the greatest revolution known in the Welch Church between the fifth and sixteenth centuries. By his influence and authority the churches of Wales were first led into conformity with the Latin communion; and the celebrated Paschal schism, after 350 years of duration, began to be abandoned. But

^e I would not take his words (xxiii. cykli decemnovennales usque ad adventum S. Patricii in Hiberniam, et ipsi anni efficiunt numerum 437 annorum) so rigidly, as that Patrick came in 437, at the expiration of the cycle, but rather as the fact is. For if he had been as ignorant as the other British chronologists, he would probably have missed the true cycle.

this change (which, contrary to the order of events in Ireland, began in the north and was most resisted in the south) was not suddenly completed, nor without violent dissensions among the clergy and people; to which cause may be ascribed the various years in which this affair is said, either generally, or with distinction of north and south, to have been decided, viz.: 755, 768, 770, 777. Yet though "in A. D. 777, Easter was changed in South Wales" (Brut y Tywys. p. 474), that change was not as yet realized there in 802. See Ussher, Index Chronol. And the death of Elbod, in 809, is said to have been a signal for fresh disputes on the subject. Brut y Tywys. p. 475. Between^f 842 and 847, it was still a topic of private discussion, though perhaps no longer of national contention. The memory of their old ritual was long cherished among the Welch; who erroneously imagined that their discipline had been that of St. John and the Seven Churches of Asia, and therefore paid a peculiar honour to that apostle, and sometimes called their religious peculiarities the ordinances of John. See Beda, Hist. Eccl. iii. cap. 25; Probert's Triads, p. 79; Triodd Doethineb Beirdd, num. 219, p. 314; Llewelyn Vardd, Canu y Gadvan, v. 5, ab ult. In the spurious prologus, Nennius is made to entitle himself Dei gratiâ, S. Elbodi discipulus, and I think its writer understood Nennius as I do; not meaning to thank God for giving him, personally, so learned a tutor; but to profess, that by God's grace he was reunited to the catholic communion of the west, which the Paschal differences had disturbed for several centuries. He was not a disciple of John, but a disciple of Elbod. It is observable that Nennius (as distinct from Marcus) computes his own date by the decemnovennal or Latin cycle, as that established

^f Vita S. Johan. Chrysostomi, cit. Rice Rees on Welch Saints, p. 66, note. That Britain, not Ireland or Scotland, was the established in his country when he wrote ; and we verify thereby the fact, that he was an Elbodian.

It is commonly said, that Nennius was a monk or even abbot of Bangor is y Coed, studied under the celebrated Dunawd Gwr or Dionotus, and was one of those who escaped from the massacre of the monks by Ethelfrid, King of Northumbria, in 607. There is not a single date in any of the various copies of the Historia, which lays claim to an earlier century than the ninth. And the chief motive for reverting to this obsolete idea is to observe, that the entire notion of his belonging to Bangor, and his title of Nennius Bannochorensis, was probably a mere delusion, founded upon his being a disciple of Elbod, who was styled Archbishop of Gwynedd, and was Bishop of Bangor Vawr in Arvon, a place remote from the abbey of Bangor is y Coed in Cheshire, or, more correctly speaking, in Flintshire. I have detected no indications of his town or province.

He had for instructor a priest by name Beular, or rather Beulan^g, of whom a little more has been said than he merits. "I omitted (saith Nennius) the Saxon^h genealogies, cum inutiles magistro meo, id est Beulario presbytero, visæ sunt." Cap. 65. Some have called him Samuel Beulan ; but others will have it, that Beulan had, by his wife Læta, a son Samuel, who wrote commentaries upon Nennius. Gale repeatedly speaks of this Samuel as an interpolator ; Mr. Bertram of Copenhagen becomes quite impassioned on the subject ; while the oracles from Mr. Pinkerton's tripod pronounce that both Nennius and Samuel are equally vile. But neither father nor son have any historical existence, other than what the former owes to the ^h That omission is supplied in some MSS. at considerable length. We are probably not to understand that they were composed subsequently to Nennius ; but that, being then in existence, the Saxon genealogies were not received by him into his compilation ; at least, they appear to me to mention no person subsequent to the eighth century.

above text of Nemnius, and both of them to notes in prose and verse appended to one or two of the MSS. The principal record of Samuel is in the following production, contained in a Cambridge MS. of about the beginning of the thirteenth century, marked Ff. 1. 27, p. 20; which Mr. Stephenson (Pref. p. xxvi.) has printed in a form meant to be explanatory, but rather needing explanation. I believe I have restored them to the form in which the document exhibits them.

Then follows the false statement about the twenty-fourth year of Mervyn Vryeh, extracted from the spurious Prologus. The initials of the words in the first three lines, from adjutor to utatur, go through the alphabet to U, and the initials of the last three lines go on to Z; the change occurring at the sacred initial X. How to construe them; what fornifer can mean; what Ben^{ij} means, who is so called, and why; and what the nomen quinum is; are mysteries. The only thing plain from them is the origin of Samuel's mother Lata, in verse 4;

lætâ matre, his mother being glad! In spite of these obscure sayings it is not apparent to me, that Samuel, son of Beulan and Læta, is a different person from Nennius himself. For the words added to cap. 3 in one of Gale's MSS., wherein Samuel's name occurs (and wherein alone it occurs, so far as I am made aware, with the exception of those verses) are these: "I, the Samuel, that is to say the child, of my master, that is to say of Beulan the priest, wrote it in this page, yet this genealogy was not written in any volume of Britain, but was in the writing of writer." Gale, p. 119. Bertram, p. 187: "Samuel, id est infans, magistri mei, id est Beulani presbyteri, in istâ paginâ scripsi," &c. Here we see, that Samuel is only a figurative phrase for one dedicated to divine studies from his tender years. "And the child Samuel ministered to the Lord before Eli." But there is an obvious delicacy in not saying "Eli mei" instead of "magistri mei," for the priest and kind patron of Samuel was a feeble and imperfect character. The youth of Nennius, and his not having passed the inferior orders, may also be inferred from this passage; as well as from cap. 65. Therefore the writer of the verses could not mean Nennius, but might mean Beulan, by longævus Ben. If these things be so (and I see them no otherwise) we shall be quit^k of Samuel Beulanus, Samuel Beulani filius, Samuel Britannus, &c.; and Beulan himself remains, only known for his contempt of Saxon genealogy.

But another man besides Nennius, and before him, had published the Historia Britonum, Marcus the Anachoret. To him that Historia is ascribed in the famous MS. of the tenth century, published by Mr. Gunn. It was penned in A. D. 946, being the fifth and last year of Edmund, King of England; pp. 45, 62, 80. The frequent

repetition of this date, and some changes in the catalogue of cities, shew the writer to have been an Englishman or Anglo-Saxon. Mr. Gumm, in his title page, says it was edited by Mark in the tenth century. But Mark flourished early in the ninth; and it is only his transcriber, who gives us his own date in the tenth. Marcus was a Briton born, and educated in Ireland, where he was for a long time a bishop, but he settled in France, where (for aught that appears) he ended his days. Heric of Auxerre (in a prose Life¹ of Germanus, which mentions an event of A. D. 873, but was certainly published before October, 877) reports, that he and divers other persons had formerly heard, from the lips of Marcus, a narrative concerning Germanus; which Heric retails, with as little variation^m from the same narrative in the Historia Britonum (Marcus, pp. 62-5; Nennius, cap. 30-4), as could be expected in such oral repetitions. Therefore the heading of the Petavian MS. derives potent confirmation, from the fact that Marcus could repeat the substance of it by heart. Mr. Stevenson's adverse supposition is not an absurd one, that the transcriber of A. D. 946, having read Hericus de Miraculis Germani, and seen there the substance of this story, thence inferred that Marcus wrote the Historia, and so asserted it. It may be replied that, if he did read Hericus he would have seen that he quoted no book, but only conversations; and that Marcus himself in those conversations, referred

^m Nothing is more natural, than for Heric, after many years, to substitute natio Britonum for the phrase, so strange to his ears, of regio Poveysorum. The main discrepance is the expulsion of the tyrant, instead of the burning him with fire from heaven. It is astonishing that Gale should annotate "Vide Ericum in Vita Germani, quem hæc ex Nennio suspensisse constat," when the contrary is declared in such very express terms.

referred to no such historical work, but to the original sources of it. “The aforesaid bishop, whose probity whosoever hath experienced will by no means hesitate to believe his words, assured me, with the addition of an oath, that these things were contained in Catholicis litteris in Britannia.” But the words litteræ Catholice do not apply to such a compilation as this; but to the acta or gesta of their saints, which were preserved in particular churches

However, there are broader reasons to be considered, than the mere assertion of the MS. The Historia is the work of a Briton. None other is likely to have been in possession of so many British traditions; and the Irish, in particular, seem to have heldⁿ opposite traditions. Besides, he plainly signifies himself such, in a phrase which the Anglo-Saxon scribe cannot have introduced, where he quotes British legends “ex traditione nostrorum veterum.” Marcus, p. 53. Yet the work of this British man is that of an Irish author, addressing himself peculiarly to the Irish people, and exclusively Irish in the religious part of his feelings. This appears in his notices of Irish history; in his copious notice of St. Patrick; but chiefly and most demonstratively in the fifty-third page of Marcus^o. There the epochs of Patrick, Bridget, and Columkille, the three patrons of all Ireland, are commemorated; whereas the whole work does not contain the name of David, Iltutus, Dubricius, or any British saint whatsoever. Nothing can be more certain than the author’s close connexion with Ireland. This truth was appreciated, or perhaps was known, by those transcribers^p who assigned the Historia to Gildas Hibernicus; for its author, though not an Irishman, was really an Hibernian Gildas, or man of religion and learning. But all ⁿ For they derived the Britons from Britan Maol, son of Fergus Red-side, son of Nemedius.

all the premises are true of Marcus, who was *natione Brito*⁹, educatus erò in Hiberniâ, and had been an Irish bishop. For though Heric's words, "eiusdem gentis episcopus" are equivocal, the doubt is solved by those of the Ekkehards or Eccards of St. Gallen^r: "Marcus Scotigena episcopus Gallum tanquam compatriotam suum Româ rediens visitat." So that if we determine to reject Marcus, the alleged author of this production, it will only be to seek for some other man precisely corresponding in circumstances. Nennius, on the other hand, is neither recorded, nor doth he seem, to have had connexion with Ireland; he was not an Irish religionist, but an Elbodi discipulus; and he refers to the scripta Scotorum Anglorumque as to things equally foreign to himself.

We have now to compare the date of Marcus with that of the Historia. After mentioning Britannia insula, Heric proceeds to mention the holy old man Marcus, a bishop of the same nation, who was by birth a Briton, but was educated in Ireland, and, after a long exercise of episcopal sanctity, imposed upon himself a voluntary pilgrimage, and having so passed into France, and being invited by the munificence of the pious King Charles, spent an anachoretic life at the convent of Saints Medard and Sebastian; a remarkable philosopher in our days, and of peculiar sanctity. Eccard Junior explains to us that his pilgrimage was to Rome, and that on his return from thence he visited the Abbey of St. Gall. His sister's son, Moengal, accompanied him, whom they afterwards named Marcellus, as a diminutive from Marcus. At the request of Grimaldus the Abbot of St. Gallen, and at the persuasion of his nephew, he consented to tarry

tarry there, which raised a mutiny among their servants, who desired to return home. But they pacified their retinue by distributing among them the bishop's money, mules, and horses. The commencement of this sojourn fell between A. D. 841 and the June of 872^s, such being the limits of Grimald's abbacy. After a time Marcellus was made master of the abbey school, and of the boys who were training up to the monastic life, including Notkerus, who was afterwards called Balbulus, in which situation he distinguished himself in music and other sciences. But Marcus afterwards seceded to the abbey of St. Medard at Soissons. At the time, between 473 and 477, when Heric was writing this, Marcus was no more; for Labbe's reading, exercebat vitam, though changed by the Bollandists to exerect, is confirmed by "multis coram referre solitus erat," by the phrase nostro tempore, and by the description of him as having then been "sanctus senex." But his entire sojourn at St. Gallen succeeded his sojourn at Rome. And his journey to Rome was undertaken "post longa pontificalis sanctitatis exercitia;" the commencement of which exercitia could not, canonically, have preceded the completion of his thirtieth year; but cannot, according to the laws of probability, be fixed to its earliest possible epoch. From all which circumstances, it is by no means improbable, that the birth of Marcus ascended into the eighth century.

Such

^s Ratpertus de Monast. S. Gallensi, pp. 6-9, ibid. Notker the Lisper was placed under Marcellus, when a boy. But Notker died in 912, nimiâ ætate ingravescente, and in senectâ bonâ plenus dierum beato fine deficiens, consoling himself with the reflection that "man's days at the most are an hundred years."—Eccus. xviii. 9. Therefore I place his birth at least eighty years before, or in 832; and if he was a boy of fifteen when Marcellus took him in hand, the latter was master of the abbey school in 847. If Notker died at 85, 84, 83, &c., we shall draw so much nearer to 841, our chronological limit. But he could scarcely be appointed, before his uncle and he had made some considerable sojourn at the abbey. See Ekkehardi Minimi Vita Notkeri, cap. 32.

Such being the chronology of Marcus himself, we require the date of the book ascribed to him. Here it must be observed, that during and before the first half of the ninth century, the era of Christ was recently introduced and ill understood, among the British and Irish; whereat we need not complain, seeing how imperfectly it was worked out by Beda himself. "The Christian era (saith Mr. Carte) was not then, at its first coming into use, so well understood as it hath been since." Their use of the two Christian eras or years of redemption, viz. the Nativity and the Passion, sometimes one, sometimes the other, and sometimes both, increased the confusion of their Dominical dates. But the plain root of the evil was, that they did not know, and could not tell, what year of our Lord the current year was. If the Christian era were now of recent introduction, seldom mentioned, and not to be found in one book out of a thousand, few of us could tell what year thereof it is. It would be a fact of learned and not obvious attainment; and was more so to those whose learning was scanty. They knew how many years the reigning prince had reigned; but they did not know what year of Christ that was. So the English transcriber of Marcus gives us his date sufficiently, viz., the quintus Edmundi regis Anglorum, but absurdly adds that it was A. D. P. 946 and A. D. N. 976; and twice again states, that it was 547 years after A. D. P. 447, which makes^u A. D. N. 1024. Yet this imbecility does not affect the date, which is consistently given. Marcus nowhere gives an express date, that we can convert into the Annus Domini. But we have his assertion that,

^t Upon this subject see the learned preface to the Ogygia, and O'Conor in Script. Rer. Hib. xi. p. 20. And, for specimens of absurd anachronism in that era, see Gale's second appendix to Nennius, p. 118, and the Æra Cambro-Britannicæ an^u According to his computation, which allows only thirty years between the Nativity and Passion.

“from the time when the Saxons came into Britain, unto the fourth year of King Mervyn, 428 years are computed;” being in truth about fifty-one years too many. Now the fourth year of Mervyn Vrych, or 822. was no epocha, either in general or local history; and no motive can be conjectured for his computation stopping at that year of the reign, except that it was the then current year. We must, therefore, dismiss entirely his miserable attempts at Christian chronology, and take the plain fact, that he was writing quarto Mervini [Mervini. Nenn.] regis. p. 53. Therefore the book was in progress of composition in the year 822, which agrees sufficiently well with what we know of Marcus. It equally agrees with the date^v of 820 et deinceps. assigned to Gildas Hibernicus. The Historia seems to have been originally composed, whilst a certain Fernmael, son of Tudor, was Lord of Buellt and Guortigerniawn; from which passage and others, I conjecture the author to have come from those parts of Wales, and to have had some acquaintance or connexion with that descendant of Vortigern. All copies agree that Fernmael was eleventh in descent from Pascent, youngest son of Vortigern. Therefore if we suppose Pascent's son, Briacat, to be born at the time of Vortigern's death, which Owen calls 481, and Blair 484, and we may call 480, then Fernmael's birth, at thirty years to the generation, will fall upon 780, and the forty-second year of his life will coincide with 822. Therefore this date, which our ignorance when Fernmael lived and died deprives of any direct utility, seems at least to be consistent with the quartus Mervini regis, or 822. It is remarkable, that while Nennius retains the assertion that Fernmael was actually reigning (regit modò) the text of Marcus exhibits regnavit. p. 78. Nennius, cap. 52. But that is the handywork of the scribe of 946, who was particularly tenacious of his own date, and would not have Fernmael for his contemporary.

contemporary. The year 822 is, therefore, the lowest date of the original Historia. But it is also the highest, unless we are disposed to look for some other nameless Brito-I-Iibernian, anterior to Marcus, as a tortoise for the elephant. That such a one may have existed is, of course, possible; but perhaps criticism, having found exactly what it wants, will do better to acquiesce.

It results, that Marcus compiled this credulous book of British traditions, for the edification of the Irish, circa A. D. 822; and one Nennius, a Briton of the Latin communion, republished it with additions and changes, circa A. D. 858. We should, however, keep in mind, that we have not the text of Marcus upon which Nennius worked, but a text which was tampered with about ninety years after Nennius wrote; and, therefore, the Marcian text of the Petavian MS. is not, in every trifling instance where they differ, the oldest of the two.

But another edition or revisal of the Historia succeeded that of Nennius; and its author has introduced his own date with precision, yet with an utter ignorance of the Christian era. What more he introduced besides the date does not appear, but perhaps nothing of moment. It occurs in the enumeration of the six ages of the world, that precede the British history. "From the Passion of Christ 800 years have elapsed, but from his Incarnation 832, down to the thirtieth year of Anarawd, King of Mona, who now rules the region of Wenedotia or Gwynedd^w." In truth Anarawd or Honoratus, son of Rodri Mawr, reigned over Gwynedd from 876 to 913, and the thirtieth year of his reign was the year 906, and the same in which that scribe was writing; being just seventy-four years out of his reckoning. Brut y Tywys. p. 482-5. And as he republished with an interpolated

terpolated date the Nennian edition, so (we have seen) did another person, in A. D. 946, send forth again the older Marcian edition.

It will strike every reader, that this work was peculiarly dealt with. It was treated as a sort of common land, upon which any goose might graze. Mere transcribers seem to have played the editor, if not the author. The dates thrice introduced by the Petavian scribe are not annexed in the way of colophon, but are interwoven into the solid text, in complicated sentences, and with elaborate miscalculation. Nennius himself no where states, that he was republishing, with a limited amount of change and addition, the Historia of the Brito-Irish compiler. It seems to have been regarded as the album or common-place book of Britannia, to which any one might laudably add such passages as he knew of; and elucidate or obscure, according to his ability, what he found already there. It was no rule to expunge what the predecessors had stated, even when stating the contrary; from which cause inconsistencies disfigure the text. So Marcus having stated that St. Patrick went to Ireland in A. D. 405, Nennius has faithfully republished it; but almost in the next sentence of the same chapter he states, that there were twenty-three decemnovennial cycles unto St. Patrick's advent, in a true sense, I believe, but certainly in one utterly discordant with the previous text. In like manner, Fernmael, son of Tudor, continued to be living and reigning in 858, and in the thirtieth of Anarawd, or 906, and was not killed off till 946. This common-place book of Britain seems rather analogous to the histories about St. Patrick, which Tirechan has strung together under the name of Annotaciones. The Historia Britonum merits such a title equally well, and the like of it is signified by its writers in their phrase of Experimenta, cap. 1, 3, and 12, Gale; pp. 48, 53, Gunn. This state of the case tends to absolve Nennius from the charge of imposture in appropriating the labours of another; for the mode of proceeding with this book seems to have been understood. In his Apology he speaks of his own work or publication, as being one, "quod multi doctores atque librarii scribere tentaverint," authors and transcribers classed together; and complains, that "nescio quo pacto difficiliter reliquerint," each transcribing doctor leaving it less intelligible than he found it; which misfortune he ascribes to frequent wars and pestilences, instead of the more proximate cause, viz.: the accumulated blunders of ill-instructed men. He apologizes for presuming "post tantos hæc tanta scribere," and he can scarcely apply the words "post tantos" generally to the historians of Britain, for he had complained that there were next to none; but the "hæc tanta" is to be taken literally for the very book in hand. In his concluding chapter he mentions his omission (at Beulan's suggestion) to write the Saxon genealogies, seemingly of earlier date than his own, "nolui ea scribere," adding, "but I have written of the cities and remarkable things of Britain, as other writers wrote before me." The same observations apply to this passage. Lastly, when he says of a Trojan genealogy^x, "hæc genealogia non est scripta in aliquo volumine Britannicæ, sed in scriptione . . . scriptoris fuit," he clearly means "in any previous copy or edition of this book of Britain;" and in fact it is absent from the text of Marcus. The Irish version now published, is actually entitled, in the Books of Lecan and Hy-Many, "Leabhar Breathnach," i. e. Volumen Britannicum, or Book of Britain. The vast avidity with which Geoffrey of Monmouth was received by the world prevents our wondering that transcripts of this book had been multiplied within about thirty-six years, as seems to have been the case.

This condition of affairs offers a great excuse for our Irish translator, if he be found to introduce many things illustrative of British history, that were not in any transcript of the Latin book from which

which he professes to take his own, or as Nennius hath it, "in aliquo volumine Britannia." It were indeed more hard to excuse him, for giving expressly "as recorded by Nennius" certain details of Irish history which Nennius did not record, but for the great likelihood that the same thing happened in Ireland as in Britain, viz.: that the successive editorial transcribers of the Irish Nennius inserted words of their own. In which case, that false heading may not have been the work of any man who knew it to be false. There is some reason to think, that the Irish translation was made by a certain Guanach, and that the text, as now printed, was revised by a later hand. For after a translation of considerable closeness and fidelity from Nennius, it is written, "it was in this way that our noble elder Guanach deduced the pedigree of the Britons, from the chronicles of the Romans." Infra, p. 37. But a work, actually commencing with the words "Ego Nennius [Nennius] Elvodugi discipulus," could never mean to rob that author of his matter, and falsely ascribe it to a certain Guanach. It is, therefore, apparent that Guanach was either the Irish translator, or an editor of the translation; and that this annotation proceeds from an editor of junior date and calling him his elder^v. The "chronicles of the Romans," employed by Guanach, are nothing more than the Latin copies of the Historia Britonum; which is stated by Nennius himself (in the Irish translation, as well as in the original, of his Apologia) to be partly collected from the Annals of the Romans and the Chronicles of the Saints. The earliest MS. of the Irish Nennius, so far as is known to its editor, is of the twelfth century. But the

^v According to O'Reilly (Irish writers, p. 120) there is a memorandum prefixed to the copy of the Leabhar Breathnach, in the Book of Hy-Many, which says that Nennius was the author, and Giolla Caoimhghin (who died in 1072) the translator. This would furnish increased evidence to the employment of a plurality and succession of hands. The Book of Hy-Many has passed into the hands of some private collector, and is no longer accessible.—(T.) epoch of the translation does not seem to transpire from any internal evidence.

P. S.—A partial elucidation of the very obscure verses in page 10 is due to the kindness and ingenuity of the Rev. S. R. Maitland, who observes that the last line, if we read it “En vocatur Ben notis litteris nominis quinis,” not *quini, will apply to the name Benlanus (though not to Beulanus), which spelling is mentioned in Fabricius, and that of Benlanius in Pitseus. For Benlanus, understanding (notis, i. e. subintellectis) the other five letters, lanus, will leave Ben; or, by changing notis to motis, i. e. removed, the sense becomes more explicit. Indeed the MS., which has Beulani plainly written in red ink, has another u written above in black ink, and the red u scored under with black; which shows that attention had been attracted to the first syllable of the name. Benllan signifies Caput Ecclesiæ. Mr. Maitland thinks that magni in the second line had its origin in magri, the contraction of magistri. And also that the inexplicable word formifer should be formiter, i. e. “recté, secundum formam vel legem.” Du Cange. Upon the whole, a more obscure and enigmatical composition will scarcely be met with.

collected all that I could find, as well out of the Annals of the Romans, as out of

^m Gaels.—It is worthy of note that the Latin word Scoti or Scotti, is uniformly translated Ἰαεθιλ, Gadellii or Gaels, throughout this work. Ἰαεθιλ is the name by which the Irish and Highlanders of Scotland designate themselves to the present day. The Welch also call themselves Gwydhil, and their country Tir Gwydhil.—(T.)

ⁿ Tradition.—The word τιθnocol is here evidently used to represent the Latin “ex traditione veterum nostrorum.” It signifies, conveyance, handing down from one to another, tradition; the verb τιθnocacaim, to deliver, is in use in modern Irish. Eight hundred thousand paces is the length^u of the island of Britain. Two hundred thousand paces is its breadth. Eight and twenty principal caers [or cities] are in it; and these following^v are their names, according to the learned of Britain^w:—

Caer-Gortigern.

B. L². Νο αοβεραιω αποιλε ηρ ο θριευρ πο h-amnigeao, L¹. The name of Britain is here derived from Brutus the first Roman consul; but in another part of this work it is said to have been derived from Brutus, son of Silvius, son of Ascanius, son of Æneas.—(T.)

^s The first consul.—First is omitted in all the Latin copies, and rightly. For L. Junius Brutus is not here alluded to; and consul is said, in a general way, for a person of power and dignity. See Mr. Gunn's note vi. p. 94, &c.; Du Cange in Consul and Consulatus; Galfrid. Monumet. i. cap. 13, x. cap. 4, &c. Marcus Anachoreta, p. 80. Tywysawg appears to be the British equivalent; Bruttus Tywysawg o Ruvein; Hanes Grufudd ab Cynan, p. 584. The fable of Brute the Trojan was not devoid of a slight foundation in the Roman traditions; for Junius Brutus was descended from a Trojan who accompanied Æneas; but the name Junius, rather than the surname Brutus, was Trojan. See Dion. Hal. Ant. iv. cap. 68.—(H.)

^t Albion.—This name does not occur in any of the Latin editions. It is not of Latin origin, and has no reference to the Latin word albus; nor is its origin and meaning known. It does not appear that the Greek geographers gave any explanation of their word Ἀλβίων.—(H.)

Most of these variations are doubtless attributable to error or ignorance in the transcribers, but they are worth preserving, as it is possible sometimes, even from a blunder, to obtain a clue to the true orthography—(T.)

The twenty-eight caers do not occur till the close of the Latin Nennius; but, in the corresponding place of the MS. of 945, from Marcus, the names of thirty-three cities occur, p. 46. As Nennius gives one name, Verulam, which is not in that copy, the latter must have given six which Nennius did not receive; but the confusion of texts prevents my saying which they were. Caer Gurcoec and Caer Teim (Thame?) were two of them. Archbishop Ussher has commented upon this catalogue in his Primordia, pp. 59, 65, or 33–5 of edit. 2, (Works, vol. v. p. 82). The Irish translator has, in some cases, left it difficult to identify his names; and, on the other hand, many of the explanations by Llwyd,

^y Numerous are.—Ιριε (or Ιραο, B. L²), a synthetic union of the assertive verb, ιρ, it is, and ιαο or ιαε, they. See O'Donovan's Irish Grammar, p. 161.—(T.)

^z Innumerable castles.—This clause is inserted from B. L². L² reads οcup πο βο διαρμητηι α παχα, &c. The Latin reads: "In ea sunt viginti octo civitates et innumerabilia promontoria, cum innumeris castellis ex lapidibus et latere fabricatis." It is evident, therefore, that the Irish translator understood promontoria to mean raths or forts; for nothing was more common than to convert a promontory into a fort, by casting up an intrenchment across the narrow neck that united it to the main land. The remains of many such are still to be seen in Ireland. The word promontorium, however, is sometimes used to denote a mound or hill, and therefore may have signified also a fort of the ordinary kind. See Du Cange, in voce.—(T.)

^b Guta.—Γυτεαο, B. Γυετηια, L. —(T.) Guta is the Isle of Wight, in Latin Vectis or Vecta, in Welch Gwyth. The Latin Nennius says, "Gueid vel Guith, quod Latinè divortium dici potest." However Ynys Gwyth is simply the Channel Island. "Three principal islands are united to Ynys Prydain, Ore, Manaw, and Gwyth." Triads, 3rd series, No. 67.—(II.)

^d But the island north east.—This passage is inserted from B. L. The verb benau signifies to draw out, to prolong. O'Reilly (Dict. v. benam) quotes a passage from the Leabhar Mac Partholain, in which the word is applied to drawing a sword.—(T.)

^e And its rivers.—Inserted from B. L. as is also the expletive particle θνο, vero, autem.—(T.)

^f Sabraind.—The Sabrina or Severn. King Loerine (saith the Galfridian Chronicle) deserting his wife Gwenddolen, took a concubine, Estrildis, by whom he had a daughter, Sabrina. But Gwenddolen, levying war against her husband, slew him, and flung the two ladies into the river; the younger of whom bequeathed to it her name. Lib. ii. cap. 5. But Havren (the name of Sabrina and of the Severn) signifies a harlot; and therefore cannot refer to the innocent daughter, but relates to Estrildis herself. This renders it probable (as Mr. Carte suspected) that the fable, in its existing shape, was composed in Armorica; where the word havren does not seem to be known.

The real etymology of the Sabriana or Sabrina, Celticè Havren, is, no doubt, from huc, (Irish, ραιμ or ραιμρα) summer; part of the adjoining country being called the Gwlad yr Hav, or Land of the Summer, Anglicè Summersetshire. This passage of the Historia is taken from the words of Gildas in cap. i, including that melancholy word which is omitted in the Irish, “per quæ olim rates vehebantur,” &c.—(H.)

^g Upon them.—Ιρ̄ φορρα-ραιδεμ̄, B. Ιρ̄ ρορo-ραιδε, L. “It is upon these very rivers.” The emphatic ραιδεμ or ραιδεμ, gives an additional force, “upon the self-same rivers.” The word is not to be found in the common dictionaries, but it is the ancient form of ρεαν or ραν. φορρα-ραιδεμ would be written, in the modern Irish language, ορρα-ραν.—(T.)

the island of Britain far to the south-west. But the island of Britain extends beyond Eri far to the north-east^d.

Innumerable are its lochs and its rivers^e. Two principal rivers are in it, viz.: Tamus and Sabraind^f; it is upon them^g that the ships and barks of the island of Britain sail, with the jewels and wealth of the whole island of Britain^h.

The Britons at first filled the whole island with their children, from the sea of Ichtⁱ to the sea of Oreck, both with glory and excellency^j.

IV. Now after the deluge the world was divided^k into three parts ;

ⁱ From the sea of Icht, &c.—Understand from the British channel, or sea of the Portus Iccius or Itius, to that of Orkney. “Dathi went afterwards, with the men of Erin, across Muir n-Icht (sea of Icht) towards Leatha (Britanny),” &c.—Genealogies, &c. of Hy-Fiachrach, p. 19. So in the Duan Albanach, verse 10, (Pinker-ton’s Inquiry, ii. 321), “Britus tar mhuir n’Icht.” Where Adamnan speaks of St. Germann’s crossing the Sinus Vallicus (Channel of Gaul) to visit Britain, he gives a Latin equivalent. Vita Columb. ii. cap. 34. The Portus Iccius has been confounded with Calais and Boulogne; but is now conjectured to be the same as Vissent or Witsant, a neighbouring village. Some of the Latin copies have it, “from Totness to Caithness.” but others have no termini assigned.—(H.)

^k Was divided.—Ro πανδαο, B. L. In the text δα or δο, as it is often spelt, is used for πο.—(T.) This chapter is made up from chapters 13 and 14 of the old Latin editions, at pp. 53-4, of the Marcian. The three sons of Alanus are, Hiscion, Armenon, and Neugio or Negro. The former is probably Tuiscon, father of Mannus, from whom all the Germans derived themselves. Tacit. Germ. cap. 2. For he is said to be father of Francus and Alamannus; for which latter our translator has improperly put Albanus. Armenon relates to Armenia; Negro or Neugio (here Negua), from whom he derives the Saxons, to I know not what. It is scarcely worth while to mention the Rugii. Cibidus or Cebidus (here Cebetus) to the Gepidæ. Walagothus (here Uilegotus) either to the Balti or Amali (Visigoths or Ostrogoths), but nothing indicates to which. In the genealogy from Alanus to Lamech, inclusively, the Latin copies give twenty names, and the Irish only sixteen; but it is useless to supply such mere gibberish.—(H.)

clause is inserted from B. L¹. L². Its omission in D. is an evident error of the scribe.—(T)

^r He is the son of Isaac.—Sardem is for rin or é ren, which signifies he. The insertions between brackets in the Irish text are from B. and L. Ioban, son of Japheth, occurs in B. L¹. and L², but Jobaith is omitted. In the Latin copies Semoib is called Simeon, and Mair is inserted between him and Aurthach, who is evidently the same as Athact (or Ethacht, B. L¹. or Echtacht, L²) in the Irish copies, whose name is written Etha in some MSS. of the Latin. Between Asra, or Ezra, and Iobaath, the Latin copies insert Izrau and Baath, which are most probably corrupt repetitions of Ezra and Jobaath.—(T) parts; between the three sons of Noe^l, viz.: Eoraip, Affraic, and Asia. Sem was in Asia; Cam in Affraic; Jafeth in Eoraip. The first man of the race of Jafeth that came into Eoraip at the beginning^m was Alanus, with his three sons; viz.: Isacon, Gothus or Armionⁿ, and Negua. Isacon had four sons, Francus, Romanus, Britus, Albanus. Now Armion had five sons, Gotas, Uilegotas, Cebetus, Burgandus^p, Longobardus. Negua had three sons, Vandalus, Saxo, Boarus. It is from Saxo, son of Negua, that the Saxons are descended^q; but it is from Britus the Britons come. He is the son of Isacon^r, the son of Alanus, the son of Fethuir, the son of Ogaman, the son of Tai, son of Boidhbh, son of Semoibh, son of Athacht, son of Aoth, son of Abar, son of Raa, son of Asra, son of Iobaith, son of Ioban, son of Japeth, son of Noe, son of Laimiach. Thus it is recorded in the histories of Britain^s.

V. Furthermore^t it is related in the Annals of the Romans^u, that Aenius the son of Anacis arrived in Italy after the destruction of Troy, and took to wife Lavina the daughter of Ladin, son of Pan, son of

^t Furthermore.—Here we revert to the third chapter of Nennius, from which chaps. v., vi., vii., above are translated. Essare is Assaracus, and Airic or Airic-tonus is Erichthonius. Britan exosus is that same son of Silvius (viz. Brutus), who, as the Druid had prophesied, would be "exosus omnibus hominibus." The account in Marcus, pp. 48, 50, is different, and a more obscure composition—(II.)

^u Annals of the Romans.—The whole of this and the next two chapters occur twice in the Book of Leacan; the readings of the two copies shall be referred to as L¹. and L². In B. and L¹. the reference to the British histories is separated from the foregoing chapter, and united to this; L². reads: CIO TPA achc ip amlaio peo at-riaoap Senour Opeacan a n-andalab na Roma. The reading of D., which is followed in the text, agrees with the Latin copies, in which the history of Æneas is begun thus: "In annalibus autem Romanorum sic scriptum est. Æneas post Trojanum bellum," &c.—(T.)

of Pic, son of Saturn, &c. After having slain Turn, and after the death of Ladin the king, Aenius took the kingdom of Ladianda; and the city of Alba-longa was founded by Ascan, son of Aenius, and he married a wife, and she bare him a son, viz. Silvius, shortly after^v.

Silvius afterwards married a wife, and she became pregnant, and it was told^w to Ascan that his son's wife was pregnant^x; and he sent a messenger to his son to say that he would send his Druid^y to give an opinion on his wife, to know whether it was a son, or whether it was a daughter she was about to bring forth. The Druid went, and after his return^z the Druid said to Ascan, that it was a son^a that was in her womb; and said that he would be powerful, and that he would kill his father and his mother, and that he would be hated by all^b. In fact his mother died in giving him birth. He received a name, viz. Britus, and afterwards he was nursed^c.

VI. Now^d Britus was the son of Silvius, son of Ascan, son of Aenius, son of Anacis, son of Caipen, 'son of Essarc^e, son of Tros, son of Airic, son of Idus, son of Dardain, son of Jove, son of Sardain, son of Ceil, son of Polloir, son of Zororastres, son of Mesrain, son of Cam (filii maledicti ridentis patrem), son of Noe^f.

Moreover,

^d Now.—Om inserted from L¹. Ona, B. Ono, L².—(T.)

^e Son of Caipen, son of Essarc.—These two generations, inserted between Anchises and Tros in all the Irish copies, do not occur in the Latin. Essarc, is evidently Assarraeus, and is written Αραρκε, B. Αραριγ, L¹. Αραριγ, L².—(T.)

^f Son of Noe.—In the remainder of the genealogy from Tros to Noah, the Irish copies differ from each other and from the Latin. They agree, however, in tracing the pedigree to Cham or Ham, and not to Japhet, as in the Latin copies. L¹ gives the pedigree thus. mic Θηρορ, mic Ερεχζονιυρ, mic Θαρθαν, mic Ιοιβ, mic Shaδαρρη, mic Ceil, mic Ραλλορ, mic Γωρερρορερεαρ, mic Μερραιμ, mic Καμ ερσονδ mic Ηαει (i. e. the accursed son of Noe), mic Ζαμιαχ. L² thus: mic Θηρορ, mic Ερεκζονιυρ, mic Θαρθαν, mic Ιοιβ, mic Shaδουρη, mic Ρηειλ, mic Ραλλορ, mic Γωραρορερεαρ, mi

Μερραμ, με Καμ ερφομι, πο εθιθ ιμ α αθηαρ, .ι. ιμ Ηαε μαε Λαυμιαχ (i. e. Καμ the accursed, who laughed at his father, i. e. at Noe, son of Lamech.) B. gives it thus, με Τροφ, με Ερεζου, με Οαρου, με Ιοιθ, με Σαζουρϑ, με Ραλλουρ, με Σοπαρ-ερερ, με Μερραμ, με Καμ ερφομι πο βιθ ιμμ [ε] αθηαρ, .ι. ιμ Ηοε, με Λαυμιαχ ηηθ. Where the description of Καμ is the same as in L². for βιθ is an evident error of the scribe for εθιθ.

In D., instead of the clause describing the curse of Ham, which in the other copies is given in Irish, the same thing is given in Latin as in the text. The words με Ηαε are repeated unnecessarily, and are therefore omitted in the translation. Mr. Stevenson mentions three MSS. of the Latin, which have a genealogy of Brutus and of Tros in the margin, and in which the genealogy of Brutus is made to end thus: "filii Jupiter de genere Cain [Cain?], filii maledicti videntis et ridentis patrem Noe."

The Latin copies make Tros the son of Dardanus, son of Flise, son of Juvan, son of Japhet. It will be seen, however, that the Irish version is more nearly authentic, for classical authorities make Tros the son of Erichthonius, son of Dardanus, son of Jupiter, son of Saturn, son of Cœlus. It would seem probable also that the text was corrupted by British transcribers, anxious, for the honour of their country, to deduce the ancestry of Brutus from the race of Japhet rather than from the accursed Ham. Pallor, the father of Cœl (who is evidently Cælus) is probably a corruption derived from the genitive case of Tellus.—(T.)

Τρωα ε' αυ τριε παίδεσ άμύμονεσ ίξεγέροντο.
Ίδιου τ', Ασάρακόσ τε, και άντιθίου Γανυμήδεσ.

D. reads corruptly Ham, both as the name of the son of Tros and of the city. B., L¹., and L². read Hiom in both places,

Moreover^g, Tros, son of Airictondus^h, had two sons; viz., Ilum [Ilus] and Asareusⁱ; it was by him [i. e. by Ilus] was founded Ilum, i. e. Troy^j; he had a son, Laimidoin, the father of Priam. Asare, moreover, was the father of Capen, Capen was the father of Anacis, Anacis the father of Aenias^k, Aenias the father of Ascan, the grandfather of Britan exosus, i. e. of Britan the abhorred^l. It was in this way that our noble elder Guanach^m deduced the pedigree of the Britons, from the Chronicles of the Romans.

^l The abhorred.—Secan-αεϋαρ ὀριζι εκ-ορρι ηε-Αρσων ηη, α. ὀριζαν ηηρενεχ, Β., which may be translated thus: “the grandfather of Britus exosus, i. e. of Britain the abhorred, was that Ascan.”—(T.)

^m Our noble elder Guanach.—In Β. and L. this reference to Guanach, and the Chronicles of the Romans, is written so as to relate to what follows, not to what precedes; but the words ηρ αυηαδ ηη and the sense of the whole passage are inconsistent with this supposition, and therefore D. has been followed. Guanach is not mentioned in the Latin copies of Nennius; and therefore, as well as from his being called “our noble elder,” we may perhaps conclude that he was an Irish historiographer; but no such Irish writer is known, nor is the name Irish; unless we suppose it to be the same as Cuan or Cuana (in the genitive case Cuanach), which was a common name among the ancient Irish. An historiographer of this name is frequently cited in the Annals of Ulster; thus “sic in libro Cuanach inveni,” at A. D. 467, 468, 471, 475, 552, 600, 602, 628; or “sic est in libro Cuanach,” A. D. 610; or “ut Cuana scripsit,” A. D. 482, 489; “ut Cuana docet,” A. D. 598; “secundum librum Cuanach,” A. D. 543. As no reference to Cuana occurs in these annals after the year 628, Ware supposes the writer so named to have flourished about that date; and Colgan doubtfully identifies him with S. Cuanna, Abbot of Lismore; Ware’s Writers, by Harris, p. 26; Colgan, Acta SS. ad 4 Feb., p. 251. All this, however, is simple conjecture; for we know nothing of the writer quoted in the Annals of Ulster except his name, unless he be the same as the Cuana, who is called “Scriba Treoit,” or of Drogheda, and

VII. After many years subsequently, according to the prophecy of the Druid, it happened to Britus to be shooting arrows in presence of the king, i. e. his fatherⁿ, and an arrow from him pierced the temple^o of the king, and the king died immediately there, i. e. his own father^p; and afterwards he was driven out of Italy, to the islands of the Torrian [Mediterranean] sea, and the Greeks expelled him out of the Islands in revenge for Turnn, who had been killed by Aenius^q. After this he came to France, and Torinis^r was founded by him, and he was not suffered to remain there^s, but came afterwards into the island of Britain, where he took possession of the kingdom, and the island was named from him, and became full of his children and his descendants. And thus was it first peopled, according to the Romans.

^z Numitor, son of Proc Sylvius.—Νειμτυρ. Νυμιτυρ, B. L¹. L². Proc, for Procas; it will be observed that in the Irish form of the proper names the terminations as, es, us, are uniformly omitted. L¹. reads Πικ here, and L². Πικκ, instead of Ρροικ, which, however, is evidently the true reading. The list of the Silvii which follows appears to have been taken from the Chronicon of Eusebius, although with some variations and inaccuracies. The genealogy, as given by Eusebius, is as follows: Numitor, son of Procas Sylvius, son of Aventinus Sylvius, son of Aremulus S., son of Agrippa S., son of Tiberinus S., son of Carpentus S., son of Capis S., son of Athys or Egyptius S., son of Alba S., son of Æneas S., son of Posthumus S., brother of Ascanius and son of Æneas. See also Dion. Hal. and Livy. Our Irish author has omitted three generations between Tiberinus and Alba; and it is probable that Ascan Sylvius, whom he makes the son of Posthumus, is a mistake of the scribe (although it occurs in all the MSS.) for Æneas. He also makes Sylvius Posthumus the grandson, instead of the brother, of Ascanius, for which there is no authority; although Livy makes Posthumus the son, not the brother, of Ascanius.—(T.)

^a Thirty-nine years.—Probably a mistake for twenty-nine, which is the number of years assigned to the reign of Posthumus by the Chronicon of Eusebius. L². reads τριχα βλιαδαν ατε, thirty other years, but omits the next clause contain-until his son, viz., Britus, killed him, as we have said^x. Silvius was the name of every king from that time^y until the coming of Romul, himself the son of Rea Silvia, daughter of Numitor, son of Proc Silvius^z, son of Aventine Silvius, son of Aramulus Silvius, son of Agrippa Silvius, son of Tibern Silvius, son of Alban Silvius, son of Ascan Silvius, son of Postam Silvius; he and Britus were brothers, and they were the two sons of Silvius, son of Ascan, son of Aenius.

Postomus was sovereign of the Romans, thirty-nine years^a. Britus was sovereign of the island^b of Britain thirty years. Postomios his brother, was sovereign of the Romans as we have said. Heli, the priest, was prince of the children of Israel^c; and it was in his presence the ark was taken into captivity^d, and was brought back soon after.

From the conquest of Britus to the conquest of the Picts in the islands of Orc^e, were nine hundred years, and they took the northern^f third

ing the length of the reign of Britus, so that there is reason to suspect that a line may have been overlooked by the scribe, and that the thirty other years really belonged to the omitted reign of Britus.—(T.)

^d Into captivity.—This clause relating to the captivity of the ark is omitted in all the MSS. except D., but it occurs in the Latin: “quando regnabat Bruto in Britannia, Heli sacerdos iudicabat in Israel, et tunc archa Testamenti ab alienigenis possidebatur;” and these words seem taken from the Chronicon of Eusebius, where the capture of the ark is thus recorded: “Mortuo Heli sacerdote archa testamenti ab alienigenis possidetur.”—(T.)

^f Northern.—In the Latin “in sinistrali plaga Britanniae.” Anciently the north was considered to be on the left hand side, and the south on the right, looking east, as the ancient Christians did in prayer. And the same language is still used in Irish, for tuaid is properly the left hand, as well as the north; and deap signifies the right hand and the south. See Ussher, Primordia, pp. 80, 1021.—(T.) Likewise in British go-gledd, quasi-sinistralis, the north; and deheu-barth, pars dextra, the south.—(II.)

nus, out of the Psalter of Cashel (which, very probably, contained a copy of this work), as his authority for the number of Partholan’s companions. After giving the names of Partholan’s wife and three sons, he says that there came with him an army of a thousand men, mille do ðluag i malle pu, do peip Nenniur, amad leuḡeop a Þpatap Charil, “according to Nennius, as we read in the Psalter of Cashel.” Mr. Dermot O’Conor, in his translation of this passage, has transformed Nennius into Ninus.—(T.)

⁵ In one week.—This event, as Keating tells us, from the Psalter of Cashel, took place 300 years after the arrival of Par-

third part of the island of Britain by force from the Britons, and they dwell there unto this day.

Afterwards the Gaels took the same division occupied by the Picts; and they made a treaty with the Picts against the Britains.

The Saxons afterwards took the island of Britain in the time of Marcian the King^g. But Gortigearn was then King of Britain, i. e. the crew of three ships^h came out of Germany under two brothers, viz., Ors and Aigeast, so that they drove the Britons into the borders of the islandⁱ.

tholan; see also the Annals of the Four Masters, who give A. M. 2820 as the date of this plague, and 2520 as the date of Partholan's arrival. Keating fixes the arrival of Partholan in the twenty-second year before the birth of Abraham, on the authority of an ancient poem, or 300 years after the Deluge. It never seems to have occurred to these ancient historians to explain how all this minute knowledge about Partholan and his followers could have been preserved, if they had all perished in the plague. O'Flaherty (Ogygia, p. 65) places the birth of Abraham in A.M. 1949, and the arrival of Partholan in A.M. 1969, on the authority of the Annals of

ⁿ In judgment his mother.—This clause is added from L. The double paricide of Partholan is not mentioned in the Latin copies. Keating speaks of it thus: Αρ ι κυρ umma ð-ταιμιζ [Partholon a η-Ερηνν επε μαρ ðο ιμαρβ πε α αεαρ, αγυρ α ιμαεαρ, αγ ιαρρυσð ριζε ð'α θραεαρ, ζο ð-ταιμιζ αρ τελιοð α ριονγετε, ζο ραιμιζ Επε, ζοναð απε ριν ðο κυρ Όια πλαζ αρ α ρλιοεε, περ μαρβαð νασι μιλε πε η-αοιν ρεαεεμαν οιοð, α η-θεινν Εοαρ. The Four Masters, ad A. M. 2820, place this event "at the old plain of Moynalta, on the Hill of Edar," or Howth;—πορ pen μαζζ Εαλτα Εουρ; and they add, that a monument in memory of it was erected at Tallaght, near Dublin, thence called Ταμλεαθε μμζιπε Ραρηαλαν, the Tamhleacht, or plague monument of the posterity of Partholan.—(T.)

^o Eri.—The words pen m Eirino are added from L. The arrival of Nemed is dated by the Four Masters, A. M. 2850; and by O'Flaherty (Ogygia, p. 65) A. M. 2029. Ζαb, when followed by a preposition, has a neuter signification.—(T.)

^q The tribute.—Added from B. L. For an account of the Irish traditions about the Nemedians, their contests with the Fomorians or mariners, and the oppressive tribute imposed upon them, see

Keating's History of Ireland. O'Flaherty dates the flight of the Nemedians, A. M. 2245. The Fomorians were "men of the sea," for so the name signifies, i. e. they were pirates. Keating says: Αρ αυρ δο ζαυρζι Πομοραιζ διοθ, .ι. ο na m-beiz az deunam φοζλα αρ μυρ. Πομοραιζ, .ι. φο μυριθ. "For this reason they are called Fomorians, because they used to commit robbery on the sea. Fomorians, i. e. on the seas."—(T.)

^r Viri Bullorum.—Υιρινθ, in D, is a manifest error of the scribe for Υιρι. D is the only one of the three MSS. that gives the Latin names here. Bullum, in the Latinity of the middle ages, signified, according to Du Cange, Baculum pastoris; which suggests a derivation of the name Fir-Bolg, that the Editor has not seen noticed. Keating derives it from bolg, a leathern bag, or pouch; and others think that this colony were Belgæ. See O'Brien's Dict. in voce bolg, and O'Flaherty (Ogygia, p. 73), who fixes the date of the arrival of the Fir-Bolg, A. M. 2657. The Four Masters place this event under A. M. 3266.—(T.) See Ad. Notes, No. V.

Nemed afterwards inhabited Eri°. He was the son of one Agnoman; his race dwelt long in Eri° until they went into Spain, flying from the tribute^a imposed on them by the Muiridi, i. e. the Fomorians.

The Viri Bullorum^r, i. e. the Firbolg, afterwards, and the Viri Armorum, i. e. the Fir-Gaileoin, and the Viri Dominiorum, i. e. the Fir Domnann: these were the race of Nemed^s.

Afterwards the Plebes Deorum, i. e. the Tuatha De Danann^t, took Ireland;

morum is a literal translation of Fir-Gaileoin, for γαλλίαν signifies a dart or spear. (See O'Brien in voce). The Fir-Domnann are supposed to be the same as the Damnonii or Daumonii, and the fanciful derivation of their name given by Keating, is far less probable than that suggested by our author; although both are, most probably, wrong. Keating's account of these tribes of the Fir-Bolg is as follows. After noticing the five leaders of the Fir-Bolg, he says: Ἀρ δὸ νὰ παιορτοῦαῖς πε γὸ νὰ β-φορῖνὸς ἄαρῆτορ Φῖρ ὀολῆ, Φῖρ Ὀμοῖννῶν, ἀγυρῆ Γαῖλεοῖν. Fir Bolg, from the leathern bags that they had with them in Greece, for carrying mould, to lay it on the flat-surfaced rocks, so as to convert them into flowery plains. Fir Dhomhnann, from the deep pits (doimhne) they used to dig to obtain the mould to be carried by the Fir-bolgs. And the Gaileoin were so called from their spears; because they used to be under arms to protect them all when they were performing their task; and it was from the spears (gaibh), or from the lances (sleaghailbh) which they used as arms, that they were so called." See also the Poem beginning Ἐρε ἀραρ ἠα ἠ-ιορῆα, by O'Mulconry of Cruachain, in the Leabhar Gabhala (O'Clery's copy, Royal Irish Academy, p. 34), which was most probably Keating's authority.—(7.)

See Keating. O'Flaherty dates the invasion of the Tuatha De Danann, A. M. 2737. The Four Masters, A. M. 3303.—(T.)

^u Goibnen, fíber.—In B. and L. the trades or arts practised by these “chief men of science” of the Tuatha De Danann, are given in Irish, not in Latin as in the text; and their names are also somewhat varied. *Lúctand páep. viz. the nurse of the poets; Goibnenn, the smith.” These personages (with the exception of Etan “the nurse of poets”) are all mentioned by Keating. Etan is thus noticed by O'Flaherty, “Etna poetria, filia Diankecht, filii Asaraci, filii Nedii, Lugadii regis amita, et soror Armedæ medicæ, fuit mater Dalboethii regis,” &c.—Ogygia, iii. c. 14, p. 179. The genealogy of these chieftains is thus given in the Leabhar Gabhala (p. 48): Eochaid Ollathar, diair bo h-ainm an Dagda, mac Ealatham, mic Dealbaioir, mic Net, mic Ionndai, ceitire ficit Ollathar. “Eochaidh Ollathar, who had the name of the Dagda, son of Ealathan, son of Dealbaoth, son of Net, son of Ionndai (reigned) fourscore years.” Dealbaioir mac Ogma Grianoim, mic Ealatham, mic Dealbaioir, mic Neit, mic Ionndui, deic m-bliathar. “Dealbaeth, son of Ogma Grianoim, son of Ealathan, son of Dealbaeth, son of Ned, son of Ionndai, (reigned) ten years. See also O’Flaherty, Ogyg. iii. c. 13, p. 179.—(T.)

^x The letters of the Scots.—The ancient occult methods of writing were called Ogham. Ogma was surnamed Griann-eitir, the resplendent poet, which O’Flaherty Latinizes into Ogma Griananus (Ogyg. iii. c. 14, p. 179).—(T.)

Tuipcao, but the Irish traditions represent the battle of Moy Tuireadh as having been fought between the Tuatha De Danann, and the Firbolg; so that this reading is probably an error of some scribe.—(T.)

^a Into their tower, &c.—This is stated as of the Milesians by Nennius; and the tower is said to have been of glass. The legends of glass towers, houses, ships, &c., are capable of two solutions: the one natural, and referring to a time when glass windows were a great rarity; and the other mystical, and analogous to Merlin’s prison of air, whereof the walls, though invisible and transparent, were for ever impassable. See Roman de Merlin, cvviii. On that principle, every magic circle described by a wand of power is a tower of glass; and a circle of triliths or of stones, though it be a half-open enclosure (a point harped upon in almost every combination of British words), is a perfect and inviolable structure. ^d Or according to others.—The second account of this event is found only in D. and is more in accordance with the Irish traditions. See Keating, and the Leabhar Gabhala. The tower, called Conaing's Tower, from Conaing, son of Faobhar, is said to have been on the island on the north coast of Ireland now called Τορημ, i. e. Tower Island, corrupted into Tory island. After the destruction of the Fomorians, another body of pirates commanded by More, son of Dela, with a fleet of thirty (some copies of Keating read sixty) ships from Africa, again occupied the island, and were again attacked by the Nemedians; but the tide coming upon them unperceived during the battle, the Nemedians were all drowned, except the crew of one boat. Nennius, as has been said, attributes this exploit to the Milesians. It would seem as if two or three different stories had been confounded together in the accounts of it that now remain. See O'Flaherty, Ogygia, iii. c. 7, p. 170.—(T.) Fergus Leithdearg was one of the four sons of Nemed, and father of Britan, from whom the Irish deduced the name of Britain and the pedigree of St. Patrick.—(H.) a very strong fortress on the sea. The men of Eri went against them to the sea, so that they fought with them until the sea closed^b upon them all, except the crew of one ship^c; and thus they [the Irish] took the island afterwards. Or, according to others^d, it was the descendants of Nemed, with Fergus Leith-dearg [the red sided], son of Nemed, that destroyed the tower, &c.

X. Afterwards came a company of eight^e, with eight ships, and dwelt in Eri, and took possession of a great portion of it.

But the Firbolg seized upon Mann, and certain islands in like manner, Ara, Ili, and Rachra^f.

The children of Galeoin^g, also, the son of Ercal [Hercules], seized the μοότορ, as if it were intended for Damochtor, a proper name, as in the Latin copies; but the verb ταναοσασ, which is the third person plural, shews that in this MS. also the words meant a company of eight. L. and B. read only cona longear or γονα longip, with their ships, omitting ocht. Some of the Latin copies read Clan Hector, Clan Hictor, and some merely Hictor; a word which in Irish signifies eight men.—(T.)

^f Ara, Ili, and Rachra.—Αρα 7 Ιλα 7 Recca, B. Αρα 7 Ιλε 7 Racca, L. The islands of Ara, Ila or Islay, and Rachlin or Rathlin, are intended. In the Latin we read “Buile autem cum suis tenuit Euboniam insulam, et alias circiter.” Eubonia is the Isle of Man, and Buile is most probably a corruption of δολγ or Ʋip δολγ.—(T.)

^g The children of Galeoin, &c.—That is to say the Fir-Galeoin before mentioned; being that tribe of the Firbolg who obtained Leinster. The original merely says, that Istoreth, son of Istorin, occupied Dalriada, i. e. Argyle, Lorn, and their vicinage; and has nothing about the Orkneys. The translator, in this instance, has only heaped confusion. For the name of Agathirir, grandfather of Istorin, means Agathirsus, i. e. Pictus; yet he is made a Ferbolg, and distinguished from the race of Cruithnich or Picts, in which occurs another Istoreth. I suppose the name Istorinus of Nennius to be the Irish name Starn, which occurs in the brother of Partholan (Ogygia, part i. p. 4) and the father of Simon Brec (Keating, p. 37); and which has been derived from stair, history. See Wood's Primitive Inhabitants, pp. 14, 118. The name Historeth of Nennius, transferred by our translator to the Picts, is quoted as son of Agnamhan, but Starn, father of Simon Brec, was grandson of Agnamhan, which has been interpreted Song. See Wood, ibid. p. 13.—(H.)

Istoreth, son of Istorine, son of Aigin, son of Agathirir^b, were dispersed againⁱ from the islands of Orc, and then came Cruithne^k, son of Inge, son of Luithe, son of Pairte, son of Istoreth, son of Agnaman, son of Buan, son of Mar, son of Fatheacht, son of Javad, son of Japheth; so that he seized the northern part of the island of Britain, and his seven sons divided his territory into seven divisions, and each of them gave his name to his own portion^l.

The seven sons of Cruithne are Fib, Fidach, Fotlaid, Fortrean, Cat, Ce, Cirig. As Columbcille said^m.

Seven of the children of Cruithne
Divided Alban into seven portions;
Cait, Ce, Cireach of the hundred children,
Fib, Fidach, Fotla, Foirtreann.

And Aenbeaganⁿ, son of Cat, son of Cruithne, took the sovereignty of the seven divisions. Finacta^o was Prince of Eri at that time, and^p took hostages of the Cruithnians.

Now five men^q of the northern Cruithnians, i. e. five brothers of their is inserted from L. and from B. (where it occurs in another place). B. in this place agrees almost exactly with D. Immediately after the genealogy of Cruithne, L. adds: Ír h-e athair Cruithnech agus ceo bliadain ipirige. Seacht meic Cruithne indro . . . 1. Fíob, agus Fíodach, agus Fíodla, agus Fíortreann, Cait, agus Ce, agus Cirig, ut dixit, &c., as in the text. After Columbkille's verses follows, Co ro poind-feat i feét pannaib in fearann, agus ip e ainm cach fip dib fil for a fearann, ut ep̄t Fíob, Ce, Cait, 7c. xiii ri con gobrao dib forro, agus gabair Onbecan mac Cait mic Cruithne airdhri na peét penn rin. Then follows Fíodacta pa

^r Pictatus or Inpictus.—Or perhaps we should translate, “Pictatus or the Pictus.” L. reads Pict̄ab̄ur, and B. Pict̄at̄ur, without the second name. The city of Angustoritum, or Poitiers, capital of Pictavia, or Poictou, in France, is evidently the city meant. The fable is invented to suit the similitude of names. Keating, quoting the authority of the Psalter of Cashel, makes the Cruithneans a people of Thrace, and supposes them to have founded Pictavium in the course of their migrations, before their arrival in the British isles. See Keating, at the reign of Heremon.—(T.)

^t To their brethren.—The substance of this section, with some additional matter (the length of the reigns, for example, of the sons of Cruithne, and the cities where they reigned), is given in another copy, near the beginning of this Tract, in both B. and L.—(T.)

their father Cruithne, went from the islands of Ore, to the Franks, and founded a city there, viz., Pictatus or Inpictus^f, so called from the pick-axes^g; and they came again to this island, i. e. to Eri, where they were for a long time, until the Gaedil drove them across the sea to their brethren^f.

The sons of Liathan^u, son of Ercal, seized the country Dieimptorum, and Guer, and Guigelle^v, until Cohenda^w and his sons expelled^x them out of Britain.

OF THE ADVENTURES OF GAEDEL, AS FOLLOWS^y.

XI. The learned of the Gaels^z give the following account of the adventures two Carthaginian brothers, whose patriotic self-devotion is recorded in many writers, especially in Sallust's Jugurtha, p. 126. Delphin. 1674. The Lacus Salinarum (here Salmara) must signify the salt-marshes near the Syrtis Major, called in maps Salinæ Immensæ; and not the lake anciently called Salinæ Nubonenses in the Mauritania Sitifensis; for otherwise the Gaels would be retrograding eastwards to Rusicada. The city of Rusicada (here Ruiseagdæ) was near the modern Stora, to the west of Bona, and had a Donatist bishop Victor, and a Catholic bishop Faustinian. See Optatus a Dupin, p. 14, p. 369. Antwerp. The Montes Azaræ (here Mount Iasdaire) are the adventures of their ancient chiefs. There was a certain nobleman in exile in Egypt, after he had been banished out of the kingdom of Scythia, at the time when the children of Israel passed through the Red Sea, and Forann [Pharoah], with his host, was drowned. The army that escaped without being drowned, banished out of Egypt the aforesaid noble^a exile, because he was the son-in-law of the Forann that was drowned there; i. e. Forann Cincris^b.

Mons Aurasius, stretching S. W. of Rusicada. The River Malva is now the Enza, at or near the division of the Algerian and Maroquin states. The Mediterranean Sea is the Mare Terrenum, or Land Sea, of Marcus, pp. 52 and 49, and of Tirechan in his Annot. p. xix. Wherever (as in Nennius, cap. ix. Galfrid. Monumet. 1, c. 12, and in the Lives of St. Patrick) the Tyrrhenum æquor is spoken of by writers of these islands, it is a corruption of Terrenum, and means the Terranean or Medi-Terranean. It is worthy of observation, that learning, neither inaccurate nor very common, has found its way into this geography of the Historia Britonum. It has been copied, in an ignorant manner, by the Archdeacon of Monmouth, or by the original author whom he rendered. Galfrid. Monumet. 1, cap. 11, 12.—(H.)

Afterwards the Scythians went, with their children, into Africa, to the altars of the Philistines, to the wells of Salmara^c, and between the Ruiseagdæ^d, and Mount Iasdaire^e, and across the River Mbalb^f, through the Mediterranean Sea^g to the pillars of Hercules, beyond the sea of Gadidon^h to Spain; and they dwelt in Spainⁱ afterwards, until the sons of Miled (Milesius) of Spain^k came to Eri, with thirty boats, with thirty couples in each boat, at the end of a thousand and two years after Forann was drowned in the Red Sea^l.

The word μυνκιννο or μυνκινν, signifies the top or surface; the level plain (here of the sea). In the Leabhar Gabhala (p. 3), it is explained in a gloss by υαῆταρ, surface. Ορ μυνκινν [.i. υαῆταρ] μαπα μαρ Καρρ; “Over the surface of the Caspian Sea.” O’Reilly, in his Dictionary, although he refers to this passage, has entirely misunderstood it.—(T.)

^k Miled of Spain.—This occurs in another part of the Latin copies, “Et postea venerunt tres filii ejusdam militis Hispaniæ” (Mileao Cappane, where the proper name, Miled or Milesius, appears to stand for miles), “cum triginta ciulis apud illos, et cum triginta conjugibus in unaquaque ciula.” The word cuil or cul, (cubal, L.) is evidently cognate with the Anglo-Saxon ceol, a long boat, the root of our present English word keel. See Du Cange v. Ceola, Ciula.—(T.)

^m Tigh-Duinn.—Heber Donn, one of the eight commanders of the Milesians, was shipwrecked at Teach Duinn, i. e. the House of Donn, in Kerry. Ogygia iii. cap. 16, p. 182. This is the name still given by the peasantry of the neighbourhood to one of the three islands commonly called the Bull, the Cow, and the Calf, off Dursej island, at the south entrance of Kenmare Bay. Keating speaks of Teach Duinn as being near sand banks, Αρ an no βασιόδ iao αγ na duimacab, pe raittior Teac Duinn, ι n-ιαρεαρ Munan, αγur ip o Dhonn, mac Milead, oo βασιό ann, ζαρτιορ Teac Dhunn de. “The place where they were drowned was at the sand banks which is called Donn’s House, in the west of Munster; and it is from Donn, son of Milesius, who was drowned there, that they are called Donn’s House.” He also cites the following verses from a poem by Eochy O’Flynn :

Donn, ip Dil, ip Duana a Bean,
Dil, ip Aireac, mac Milead, Duar, Drear, ip Duaigne go m-bloio,
Do basad ag na Duimacab.

words, or abbreviations for them, et, vero, sed, post, often occur in Irish MSS., but they were always read by their Irish equivalents, just as we read the contraction “&” and, although it is really an abbreviated mode of writing the letters et.—(T).

^q Contentio magna, &c.—The Latin words at the beginning of this paragraph appear to intimate that our Irish compiler was copying from some Latin original. They occur only in D. There is nothing corresponding in the Latin copies of Nennius.—(T).

has therefore been followed. The words inserted between brackets after Amergin’s name in the Irish text, are added from L¹. and L².—(T).

^t Their poet.—The word riled implied much more than a poet. See O’Flaherty, Ogyg. iii. c. 16. p. 183, who says, “Amerginus sub fratribus suis supremus vates fuit. Quo nomine (Filedh, quasi Philosopho) non poetæ tantum, sed etiam alii scientiis apprimè versati audiebant.”—(T).

lating a British authority, probably Nennius, uses the words this island, to signify Britain. Nennius (cap. 10,) says, "Brittones venerunt in tertia ætate mundi ad Brittanniam. Scotti autem in quarta obtinuerunt Hiberniam." The six ages of the world are given in the various editions of the Historia (and with some difference in Taliesin's Divregwawl, p. 96), but are omitted by this translator. The third age was from Abraham to David, the fourth was from David to Daniel; and the sixth is from John Baptist to Doomsday. Some anachronisms of Nennius are corrected in this passage.—(H.)

age of the world. But it was in the fourth age^x of the world that the Gaels seized upon Eri. In the same age the Cruithnians took the northern quarter of the island of Britain. But it was in the sixth age^y that the Dalriada came, and took the district of the Cruithnians, and it was at that time also that the Saxons took their portion of the island from the Britons.

But after many ages the Romans^z took the sovereignty of the world, and they sent an ambassador to the island of Britain, to demand hostages and pledges, such as they had taken from every other^a country. The ambassadors, however, went away displeas'd^b without hostages ; and the king, viz., Julius Cæsar, was enraged with the Britons, and came with sixty ships^c to the mouth of the river Thames^d. Now Bellinus was king of the island of Britain at that time. And Dolabellus, pro-consul^e of the King of Britain, went to meet Julius Cæsar^f, and the soldiers of the king were cut down ; in the mean time^g tempestuous weather and storm broke his ships, and the dent mistake. Ἐρχοῦλος, B. Λ'. Ἀρχοῦλος, L'. This last reading would signify chief consul ; but the Latin calls Dolobellus "proconsul regi Britannico." Some take "Dolobellum" in the Latin to be the name of a town, an interpretation which has the authority of Geoffrey of Monmouth ; it will be seen, however, that our Irish author considered it as the name of a man—(T.) Nennius has contra Dolobellum, and Marcus, apud Dolobellum. Camden quotes it, ad Dolebellum, "a battle at Deal ;" but neither states where he found it, nor how the rest is to be construed. In this passage of the Historia, Beli Maur ap Manogan is represented as still king of Britain ;

though he was clearly dead, being father to Cassivellaunus.—Galfrid. iii. cap. 20. But Beli Maur was a sort of patron hero to Britannia, which was called his island. Taliesin, Dirge of Pendragon, p. 73. Perhaps the passage may be restored in this manner, which brings into play both the apud and the contra: "pugnabat apud Dolo[n] contra [Cassi]bell[an]um, qui erat proconsul regi Britannico, qui et ipse rex Belinus vocabatur, et filius erat Minocani."—(H.)

^j Seeds of battle.—This passage is very obscure, and the Irish text in all the MSS. corrupt. The Latin (Stevenson’s text) is as follows: “Et ibi inierunt bellum, et multi ceciderunt de equis et militibus suis, quia supradictus proconsul posuerat sudes ferreas et semen bellicosum, id est, Cetilou, in vada fluminis, quod discrimen magnum fuit militibus Romanorum, et ars invisibilis.” Here it would seem that the ζρανα ααθηα of the Irish is an attempt to translate semen bellicosum, which was probably a name given to the spikes or caltrops cast or sown in the river for the annoyance of the enemy. See Additional

Notes, No. VII. Cethilou, Cetilou, Cathilou, Cathelou, Cechilou, Cethilo, Cethi-locium, for in all these forms it is found in the MSS. of Nennius, seems to have been a British word, identical in signification with semen bellicosum. Τυρ in n-α εεναερροε, L². “Through invisible knowledge,” translating ars invisibilis. B. is altogether corrupt, τυρ in n-αζ νεε μαε ρυδ. L¹. reads τυρ ρυν n-αζ νεαμαερροε. D. has ναζρροε, where n is probably a contraction for neam.—(T.)

“Seeds of battle” is literally rendered from “semen bellicosum.” “Dictus pro-consul posuerat sudes ferreas et semen bellicosum, quæ calcitramenta, id est cethilocium [cethilou, cethiloi, cethilou, cathilou, cechilou, cathelou] in vada fluminis, etc.” The only clue to this mangled British is the Latin translation of it, which shows that caltrops, or the like thereof, were called the seed of battle, and consequently that cal or cat, battle, is the beginning of this word, and perhaps the king was driven back without victory^b to his country. He came again, however, at the end of three years, with three hundredⁱ ships, to the same bay; but Dolobellus put spikes of iron in the fording place of the river, in preparation for the battle, so that the Roman soldiers fell by this invisible stratagem, i. e., by the seeds of battle^j.

Notwithstanding, a rally was made^k by Julius, and battle was given in the land which is called Tinnandrum^l, so that he broke^m that battle before him, and took the sovereignty of the island, forty-seven years before the birth of Christ, ab initio mundi 5035ⁿ.

XIII. Now Julius, the first king of the Romans, who took the island

heu, sowing, its termination. Catheu is too short, and gives up the l in which all readings agree. Catol-heu is exactly "semen bellicosum." It is a strange criticism that, with the Latin actually given, passes it over unnoticed, and invents things alien to it! See Owen Pughe's MS., apud Gunn's Nennius, p. 127. Roberts' Tysilio, p. 78.—(H.)

For Tinandrum read Trinovantum (the Troynovant of Geoffrey), by which name London is denoted. I believe that name had its origin in a mistranslation of Orosius, "Trinobantūm [gen. pl.] firmissima civitas . . . Cæsari se dedit." vi. cap. 9.

Cæsar died B. C. 45, not 47, as stated; the statement immediately following in cap. xiii., concerning A. D. 47, has arisen out of the former by some unaccountable confusion. In Marcus, forty-seven years after Christ are made the duration of Claudius' reign.—(H.)

^o In his own senate.—In a oipecht fein, L¹. O na aipeactab fein, L². “by his own senators.” The word Aipeact, or Oipeact, signifies an assembly. It was the common name given to the assemblies of the people in Ireland at which the native Brehons administered justice; and it would seem that it is in this sense our author applies it to the Roman senate. In Anglo-Irish documents of the period of Hen. III. to Eliz., it was commonly anglicised Eriott, and Iraghte: as in the letter of J. Alen to the Royal Commissioners (1537), “And in any wyse some ordre to be taken immedyately for the buildeing of the castell hall, where the lawe is kept; for yf the same be not buyldeid, the majestie and estimation of the lawe shalle perryshie, the justices being then enforceid to minister the lawes

ii. Cluid [Claudius] was the second king that took possession of Britain, at the end of forty and four years^p after the birth of Christ, and he brought^q a great slaughter upon the Britons, and he penetrated to the islands of Orc, after causing a slaughter of his people, and after a great loss of his people^r by the chieftain whose name was Cassibellaunus. He reigned thirteen years and seven months^s, when he died in Magnantia^t of the Longobards, as he was going to Rome from the island of Britain^u.

After one hundred and forty-seven years^v from the birth of Christ, the Emperor and the Pope, viz., Eleutherius,^w sent clerks from them with letters to Lucius King of Britain, in order that the king might be baptized, and the other kings of Britain in like manner.

^t Magnantia.—For Magnantia it is Magantia in Nennius, and in Marcus, Moguntin, which are Latin modes of writing Mentz.—Nennius, cap. 17. This erroneous statement arises from a misconstruction of the words of Eutropius, vii. cap. 13. “Post hunc Claudius fuit, patruus Caligulae, Drusi qui apud Moguntiacum monumentum habet filius.”—(H.)

D. 79, primus vero annus Eleutherii, quem debuit nominasse, fuit A. D. 161.” The Irish translator, therefore, seems to have corrected this mistake of the original.—(T.) ^y Guail.—The wall of Severus, from Tinnmouth to the Solway, is stated by Nennius, after Orosius, to be 132 miles long: but the distance given by Spartianus, in his Life of Hadrian, who first drew that line of defence, viz., 80 miles, is nearer to the truth. Camden, Britt. ii.
 189, Gibson. That which is here mentioned, 2130 paces, is absurd and unac-countable. In Arabic numbers, we might have supposed the translator to have read 213 passuum, without the millia (213 being a transposition of Orosius' 132), and to have lengthened that extremely minute extent by addition of the cipher.
 But as he employs a mixture of Roman numerals and words, "two M. xxx. and C." we are in a manner cut off from that solution.

The second wall ascribed to Severus by the translator, and called by him Cladh na Muice, must be the line of Agricola and Antoninus Pius, which Severus did not restore, but Theodosius afterwards did. Perhaps he was led into this interpolation by mistaking propterea for praeterea.

The MSS. of Nennius confound the wall of Severus with that of Antoninus, both in their original description of it, and in their assertion that Carausius repaired it; for the latter, if true of any wall, relates to that of Antonine, cap. xix.
 The fable of the violent death of Severus is given at large in Galfrid. Monumet. 5, cap. 2.—(II.)

^z Cladh na muice, i. e. the pig's ditch, or the "swine's dike". It is remarkable that a very similar fosse and rampart, in the counties of Down and Armagh, which formed the ancient boundary between the territories of Oriel and Uladh or Ulidia, is called by the native Irish, "Gleann na muice duibhe," or the black pig's glen; and by the Anglo-Irish,
 "the Dane's cast." See an account of it by him was made the Saxon ditch against the barbarians, i. e. the Cruithnians, 2130 paces long, and the name of that ditch among the Britons was GUAUL⁷. And he commanded another ditch to be made against the Gaels and the Cruithnians, i. e. Cladh na muice^z, and he was afterwards^a killed by the Britons, with his chieftains.

iv. Carausius afterwards came bravely^b to avenge Severus on the Britons, so that the King of Britain fell by him, and he assumed the royal robes in spite of the king, i. e. of the emperor; so that Alectus, the Roman champion, killed him, and he himself^c [viz. Alectus] seized the kingdom afterwards^d for a long^e time.

v. Constantinus, son^f of Constantine the Great, son of Helena, took the island of Britain, and died, and was buried at Caersegeint, i. e. Minantia, another name for that city; and letters on the grave-stone in Stuart's Armagh, App. iii. p. 585, and Circuit of Muirheartach, p. 31. There is a village called Swine's Dike, on the line of the Roman wall of Antoninus, which runs from the Frith of Clyde to the Frith of Forth. Horsley (Britannia Romana, p. 172), speaking of this wall, says: "After it has crossed a brook, it leaves the parks and passes by a village called Langton, which stands about three chains south from it, and next by another village called Swine's Dike, where the track of the ditch is clearly discernible."—(T.)

^f Constantinus, son, &c.—It should be "Constantius, father," &c., as in Gale's edition. The tomb of Constantius is said to have been discovered at Caer Segeint, close to the modern Caernarvon, in 1283. The discovery of a tomb in that year is consistent with there having been a more ancient tradition to the same purpose. But Constantius did really die at York, the "Caer Ebrauc alio nomine Brigantum" of Gale's Nennius, and beyond reasonable doubt was buried there; not at Caer Segeint, as in Marcus and the translation. "Obiit in Britannia Eboraci," Eutrop. 10, cap. i. Brigantum is the translator's Minantia, and Marcus's Mianton.—(H.)

ⁱ Maxim.—See Add. Notes, No. IX.

^j He was of Gaul of Ulexis.—This clause is added from L²., it is not in the Latin. In the text (which is from D.), St. Martin is called aprtaal, an apostle, a word which in Irish often signifies no more than a prelate; in the other MSS. he is merely called eaipoz, a bishop. Dooden is the old form of the emphatic pronoun fem, he himself; it occurs in ancient MSS. in various forms, uoden, bodem, padem, foomem, from which, by aspirating, and then omitting the d, comes the modern form fem. We find it also in the forms padepm, and budepm. See O'Donovan's Irish Grammar, p. 130.—(T.) The words stone point out his name^g, and he left three seeds^h in the green of that city, so that there is not a poor man in that city.

vi. Maximⁱ was the sixth emperor that took Britain. It was at that time that the consulship was begun among the Romans, and no king was called Cæsar from thenceforth. It was in the time of Maxim that the noble venerable prelate St. Martin flourished; he was of Gaul of Ulexis^j.

vii. Maximian took the kingdom of Britain, and he led the armies^k of Britain against the Romans, so that Gratian, the emperor, fell by him, and he himself took the empire of Europe; and he did not suffer the armies he had brought with him to go back to their wives and their children, nor to their lands, but gave them many lands, from the place where there is the lake on the top of Mount Jove^l, to Canacuc^m on the south, and westward to the Mound Ochidenⁿ, a place where there is a celebrated cross^o, and these are the Britons of “Gaul of Ulexis” are evidently corrupt. The name of the river Ligeris upon which, or that of Lugugè or Ligugè (Locociagum) at which Martin at different times sojourned, may be latent. If any one prefers to see here the name of Ulysses, he must have recourse to the verses of Claudian,

“ Est locus extremum pandit qua Gallia litus
Oceani prætentus aquis, ubi fertur Ulysses

ⁿ The Mound Ochiden.—“Usque ad Culumulm occidentalem, id est, Cruc Ochidient.” This passage settles the signification of the word oimca, which enters into the composition of many topographical names in Ireland, and which O’Brien, and after him O’Reilly, explain, “a place of gaming.” Its true meaning is a mound, a tumulus. The word Cruc is explained by Davies, lippus, tumulus.—(T.)

 is no authority in the Latin for this men-

^w Master of the soldiers.—All the Irish copies make Parassis the prænomen of Letha^p, and they remained in the south ever since, and it was for this reason that foreign tribes occupied the lands of the Britons, and that the Britons were slaughtered on the borders of their land.

But Gratian, with his brother Valentinian, reigned conjointly six years. It was in his time lived the noble prelate^q in Milan, a teacher of Catholicity, viz. Ambrose.

Valentinian and Theothas [Theodosius] were in joint sovereignty eight years. It was in their time was assembled the synod in Constantinople of three hundred and fifty clerks, to banish the heresy of Macedon^r, viz., the denying the Holy Ghost. And it was in their time the noble priest Cirine [Hieronimus] flourished at Bethlehem Judah^s, the catholic interpreter.

The same Gratian, as we have said^t, and Valentinian, reigned until Maximen [Maximus] was made king by the soldiers in the island of Britain, and went^u across the sea to France; and the king, Gratian, was set at liberty^v by the treacherous counsel of the master^w of the soldiers

this magister militum: the Latin, as printed by Bertram, reads Parasius, as an agnomen of Gratianus; and Mr. Stephenson gives it thus: "Gratianus Parisiis, Meroblaudis magistri militum proditione, superatus est, et fugiens Lugduni captus atque occisus est." But the Irish makes Meroblaudes treacherous towards Maximus, not towards Gratian, which appears to have been the historical fact.—(T.) Parassis is a corruption of Parisiis, at Paris. Merobaudes magister militum was faithful to Gratian, and is said to have therefore suffered death at the hands of Maximus. "Quòd si cui ille pro cæteris sceleribus suis minus crudelis fuisse videtur, vestrum is, vestrum, Balio triumphalis et trabeate Merobaudes, recordetur interitum; quorum alter, etc., alteri manibus satellitum Britannorum gula domi fracta, et inusta femineæ mortis infamia, ut scilicet maluisse vir ferri amantissimus videretur laqueo perire, quam gladio."—Drepanius Pacatus Paneg. Theodosii, cap. 28. It seems to have been an affair like Pichegru's and Captain Wright's, and may have happened as Pacatus intimates. But the character of Maximus was not vile, and cannot be estimated from the rhetoric of Pacatus. The words of Nennius, imputing treachery to the faithful Merobaudes, are copied from those in the Chronicle of Prosper Aquitane, page 637, ap. Roncalli Latinorum Chronica. But that of Prosper Tiro, p. 679, correctly gives it, not "Merobaudis magistri militum prodicione superatus," but "Merobaude magistro." soldiers, Parassis Merobladis; and the king fled to Lugdon^x, and was taken there and put to death.

Maximen and his son Victor reigned jointly. Martin was at Torinis at that time. But Maximen was stripped of his royal robes by the consuls, i. e. by Valentinian and Theodas, at the third stone^y from the city Eigilia [Aquileia], and his head was cut off^z in that place. His son Victor also fell in France by the hand of the count whose name was Arguba^a; from the creation of the world are 5690^b years, to this event, according to all the chronicles.

XIV. It is thus the elders of the Britons have recorded their history, viz., that there were seven Roman emperors^c who had dominion over Britain. But the Romans say that there were nine of them over the Britons: that is to say, that the eighth was Severus the second^d, who died as he was going to Rome from the island of Britain. The ninth was Constantine, who was sixteen years in the kingdom of the island of Britain when he died. Four hundred and nine years^e were the

^c Seven Roman emperors, etc.—It should be observed that this Historia, as well as the Galfridian Chronicles, is framed upon the plan of dissembling the island's permanent subjection and provincial character, and of representing those Roman emperors who visited it as the only ones who ruled it. By this means the Britons of the fifth century appear as the continuing possessors of an ancient monarchy, which seven (or nine) Roman intrusions had chequered and interrupted, not as revolted against a long-established dominion. I believe Constans to be the last emperor, not depreciated by the epithet of "tyrannus," who was in Britannia.—(H.)

the Britons under Roman tribute. But afterwards the Britons drove out the Roman power^f, and did not pay them tax or tribute, and they killed all the Roman chiefs that were in the island of Britain.

Immediately, however, the power of the Cruithnians and of the Gaels advanced in the heart of Britain, and they drove them to the river whose name^g is Tin [Tyne]. There went afterwards ambassadors from the Britons to the Romans with mourning and great grief, with sods on their heads, and with many costly presents along with them^h, to pray them not to take vengeance on them for the chiefs of the Romansⁱ who were put to death by them^k. Afterwards Roman chiefs and consuls came back with them, and they promised^l that they would not the less willingly receive the Roman yoke, however heavy it might be.

Afterwards the Roman knights came, and were appointed princes and kings over the island of Britain, and the army then returned home. Anger and grief seized the Britons from the weight of the Roman yoke and oppression upon them, so that they put to death the chieftains that were with them in the island of Britain, the second time. Hence the power of the Cruithnians and Gaels increased again over the Britons, so that it became heavier than^m the Roman tribute, becauseⁿ their total expulsion out of their lands was the object aimed at by the northern Cruithnians and Gaels.

After this the Britons went in sorrow and in tears to the Roman senate^o, and thus we are told they went with their backs foremost for shame ; and a great multitude returned with them, i. e. an innumerable army of Romans, and sovereignty and chieftainry was assumed^p over them

[†] With victory.—L¹ reads co m-βυα-ῶαιῶ, with victories; and B. omits “victory and triumph,” and reads only αζυρ co η-δεαχαῶσαρ ῶια τριζ̄, “and so they returned home.” This paragraph is a translation of the following in Nennius: “Romani autem ad imperium auxiliumque, et ad vindicandum, veniebant, et spoliata Britannia auro argentoque, cum ære et omni preciosa veste, et melle, cum magno triumpho revertebantur.” For “ad vindicandum,” some MSS. read, “ad vindictam propinquorum,” which seems to have been the reading adopted by the Irish translator.

Immediately after this section, B. has a long interpolation, containing the Legend of St. Carnech, which will be found in the Appendix.—(T.)

^u Here follows.—ἴοεαρρα, added from B. This word is often written βυῶαρρα, and more commonly, in modern Irish, ρεαρρα; it signifies hereafter, henceforward.—(T.)

them afterwards. But again the Roman tribute became oppressive to the Britons, so that they slew their kings and chieftains the third time.

Afterwards there came Roman chieftains across the sea, and gained^q a very great victory over the Britons, so that they vindicated the honour of their people^r upon them, and they plundered the island of Britain of its gold, and of its silver, and took from it its satin, and its silk^s, and its vessels of gold and silver, so that they returned home with victory^t and triumph.

HERE FOLLOWS^u OF THE CONQUEST OF THE SAXONS.

XV. Now it came to pass after the aforesaid battle, and after the slaughter of the Roman chieftains three times by the Britons^v, after they had been four hundred and forty-nine years^w under the Roman tribute, that Gortigern, son of Gudal, took the chief sovereignty of Britain, and he was oppressed by the fear of the Cruithnians and Gaels, and by the power of Ambrose, King of France^x and Letavian Britain.

There

^w Four hundred and forty-nine years.—ϣ βησαοα .xl. αρ .cccc. L. B. reads ϣ m-βησαοα .xl. αρ .ccc., and the same variation between three hundred and four hundred, is to be found in the Latin copies of Nennius.—(T.)

^x King of France. etc.—Aurelius Ambrosius, with his brother, Uthyr Pendragon, are said to have taken refuge in Brittany, and to have sailed from thence to Totness, when they declared against Vortigern; but Aurelius is not elsewhere described as having any sovereignty in Gaul. The Latin has merely "necon et a timore Ambrosii." But even those words are so inconsistent with what follows, as to make them suspicious, though all copies are agreed in them. For there are two schemes concerning Ambrose, one identifying him with Merlin, and another making them distinct persons. But Nennius adopts the former (which is the bardic) scheme, and accordingly introduces the prophet Ambrose in the form of a young boy, at a period subsequent to that in which Vortigern is said to be in dread of him as a warrior. Therefore, there is interpolation in all the transcripts, unless we conclude the author not to have known what he was talking about.—(II.)

^s Three ciulae.—The word chiula, or cyula, seems to be the same as keel in English, German kiel, Swedish köl, Icelandic kioll or kioldr, Anglo-Saxon ceole. They were the boats used by the Germans. Mr. Turner supposes each to have carried one hundred men; and Layamon asserts their number to have been such, “three hundred enihten.” History Anglo-Sax. i. 245. Layamon, cit. ibid. Nennius, however, had previously, in cap. xi. (vii. Gale) described a chiula as carrying but sixty persons. The three boats could evidently bring over no force capable of influencing the fortunes of Britannia, whose shores and northern frontiers were continually assailed, and of whose petty princes, sometimes called kings, the number must probably have exceeded that. Therefore, we must either understand that the arrival of the three cyuls was a mere personal introduction of Hengist to Vortigern, and so became the basis of a more extensive subsidiary treaty, or we must discredit the statement.

In point of fact, the statement has no other authority than what it derives from an involved sentence of Gildas, which, as pointed in the editions (Mr. Stevenson’s included), has no grammar or meaning; but which reads thus, with a long parenthesis: “Tum erumpens grex catulorum de cubili læanæ barbariæ tribus ut linguâ ejus exprimitur cyulis nostrâ linguâ longis [navibus, interpolated I believe, the kiul of the low Dutch being the llong of the British language. If navibus be not (as I suppose) a simple interpolation, it should have run thus, ‘Latinâ verò, navibus?], secundis velis, secundo omine auguriisque (quibus vaticinabatur certo apud eum præsigio, quod ter centum annis terram, cui proras librabat, insideret, centum verò quinquaginta, hoc est dimidio temporis, sæpius quoque vastaret) evectus primùm in orientali parte insulæ, jubente infausto tyranno, terribiles infixit ungues, quasi pro patriâ pugnaturus, sed eam certius impugnaturus.”—Cap. 23. If this sentence contains the statement in question, that statement exists; but if it be

There came three ciulæ^y out of Germany (i. e. three barks) into exile, in which were the two brothers, Ors and Engist^z, from whom are the Saxons; this is their genealogy, viz. : Ors and Engist were the two sons of Guetilis, the son of Guigte, son of Guecta, son of Guta, son of Boden, son of Frealaif, son of Fredolf, son of Finn, son of Freann, son of Folebhall, son of Gaeta, son of Vanli, son of Saxi, son of Neag^a.

not expressed in this sentence, it hath no real existence, however many may have repeated it. The inflated phrase, “terribiles infixit ungues,” seems to speak of some effective force, rather than of a trifling retinue; and, therefore, a doubt may exist, whether de cubili is governed by grex, or whether we should not punctuate it “grex catulorum, de cubili leanae barbariae tribus” (nom. case), a tribe. The less elegant arrangement of words is a minor objection, in a work of such obscure and rugged Latinity, and in a sentence which actually appears to have undergone some alteration. If this be not so, that first arrival of Hengist was merely a diplomatic, not a military, affair.—(H.)

L'. it is given thus: Hors and Eigis. Guetilis, Guiti, Guitechtai, Gutai, Uoden, Frelab, Reaulb, Finn, Freann, Bolcall, Gota, Uanli, Saxi, Negua. In the Latin copies, Friend, Vanli, Saxan, and Negua are omitted, and after Geta is added, “qui fuit ut aiunt filius Dei. Non ipse est Deus Deorum, Amen, Deus exercituum, sed unus est ab idolis eorum, quæ ipsi colebant.”—(T.)

^b Britas, son of Olon, from whom are the Britons of Leatha.—These words are omitted in L'. and B., and the genealogy here given to Britas follows on as a continuation of the genealogy of Ors and Engist; the names are given thus in B. : Alan, Fethur, Ogaman, Tho, Bodhb, Semobh, Etacht, Aoth, Abir, Raa, Erra, Joban, Jonan, Jafeth, Noe. In L'. they are given thus: Alan, Fetur, Ogaman, Dai, Bodb, Semoth, Etacht, Athacht, Abir, Raa, Esra, Joban, Jonan, Jafeth. See the genealogy of Britus already given sec. there written Alanus, and here Olon or Eolonn, was a famous name among the Ar-morican Britons, though less used among those of the island.—(II.)

^d Now Gortigern, etc.—The Latin has nothing about Vortigern governing the Picts. But the Galfridian chronicle represents him as indebted to Pictish mercenaries for his crown. vi. cap. 7. Whence Gale conjectured him to have been genere Pictus, p. 129.—(II.) The words a Roman, are added from B.—(T.)

^e Roimn.—Printed also Ruoihin, Ruichun, Ruoichin, Ruithina, etc., etc. Mr. J. Lewis supposes that Thanet was called

Inis Ruochin, from the town of Ruoch, now Rich, or Richborough.—History of Tenet, p. 2.—(II.) B. reads, Tenet and Rohm. L'. Tenenezh and Ropin. The Latin (Stevenson's text), is "et tradidit eis insulam, quæ in lingua eorum vocatur Tanet, Britannico sermone Ruoihin."—The verb, paoam, bears a remarkable resemblance to the Latin, trado, which it is here used to translate. But the Irish pao, paz, to give, is a simple root, and trado a compound of trans and do.—(T.)

^f Gradian and Aequit.—Ἰραδιαν αγυρ Equit, B. Ἰραδιαν αγυρ Eigeeth, L'. Gratianus (the first emperor of the name) and Equitius were consuls, A. D. 374. See Baron. (in anno) n. i. But the true read-

Now Gortigern^d held in peace, under the Romans, the government of the Cruithnians, and he gave up to them [i. e. to the Saxons], the island whose name is Teineth [Thanet], but Roinn^e is its British name. Gradian and Aequit^f were in the sovereignty of the Romans at that time. But it was from the birth of Christ, three hundred and forty-seven years; and it was in the time of that king, viz., of Gortigern, that Saint German came to preach in the island of Britain, and God wrought^g miracles and many wonders by this ecclesiastic in the island of Britain, and he healed many, and brought them under baptism and faith^h.

to him. German stopped with his clerics at the door of the fortress^l. The porter went to the king with the message of the clergyman; the king said, with an oath^k, that if the clergy were to remain until the end of a year at the door of the fort, they should not come in. The porter came with this answer to German^l. German came away^m from the door in the evening, and did not know what road he should go. But one of the servantsⁿ of the king came out of the fortress^l, and bowed down^p before German, and brought him with him to his cabin kindly and cheerfully^q. And German ordered that its bones should not be broken; and on the morrow the calf was alive^s in the presence of its dam.

On the next day German repaired to the door of the fortress to pray an interview^t with the king. And then there came a man running used to denote a city, as distinguished from baile, a town, or baile móir, a large town.—(T.)

^p Bowed down.—po éapbip in D., and po plecc in B., to translate the Latin, “inclinavit se.” The verb zapbip, to prostrate, or bow down the body, is now obsolete, and is not explained in any of the Dictionaries; but plecc, to kneel, or, as now written by the moderns, pleacc or pleucc, is still in use.—(T.)

^q Brought him cheerfully.—Roƿ ƿuƒ in D., and roo ƿuc, in B. are only varied spelling of the same words, and signify “he brought.” In modern Irish, do éuƒ. D. reads co cam ƿuƿeach. B. reads co ƿailiö, which has been substituted in the text for ƿuƿeach. Co ƿailiö (in modern orthography ƒo ƿaiö-

liö) means joyfully, cheerfully. The Latin is benigne, which is more nearly rendered by co cam.—(T.)

^r He had no cattle.—ñi po ba acca o épud, B. The Latin is “Et ille nihil habebat de omnibus generibus jumentorum.” The word cpud or cpod here used, signifying cattle, is the origin of the word Cro, Croo, or Croy, in our old laws, denoting a fine, mulct, or satisfaction for murder, manslaughter, or other crimes, such fines having anciently been paid in cattle. See Du Cange in voce CRO; Jamieson’s Scottish Dictionary in voce; and Ware’s Irish Antiquities, by Harris.—(T.)

 which is now, as Mr. O'Donovan informs me, obsolete in every part of Ireland; but it was ἰν use ἰν Keating's time, who ἰν running, and full of sweat from head to foot^u; and he knelt^v to German, and German said, “Dost thou believe in the Holy Trinity?” and he replied, “I believe^w.” And German baptized him and gave him a kiss: and he said unto him^x, “Arise, now thou shalt die, and the angels of God are awaiting thee.” And he went cheerfully into the fortress^y, and was put to death by the king, for the king was accustomed^z to put to death every one of his people that did not come^a before sun-rise^b to do the work of the palace.

German passed the whole of that day till night^c at the door of the fortress, until the same [i. e. the first mentioned] servant came; and German said to him, “Take care, take care^d that none of thy people be in this fortress this night.” He immediately brought out with him the nine sons he had in the fortress, and he brought the clergyman with him to his house again; and they all kept watch. And the fire of God^e immediately came from heaven upon the fortress, so that it burned the people of the fortress, both men and women, one thousand persons, through the anger of God and of German; and it remains a ruin to the present day.

On the following day this servant^f, with his sons and the people of the district, in like manner were baptized; and German blessed him and his children^g. His name was Caiteal, and through the word

XVII. Now, the Saxons remained in the Isle of Teineth [Thanet], and Gortigern was feeding and clothing the Saxons^l, that they might fight for him against^m Pictland. Butⁿ when the Saxons had multiplied, the Britons not only refused to feed or clothe them, but the Britons warned them all to go away.

But Hengist^o, who was an experienced, wise, cunning, and subtle man, made answer to them (for he saw that the Britons were feeble without soldiers, without arms), and he said to the King Gortigern in private^p: “Let us make good counsel; let us send into Germany for soldiers, that we may be numerous^q against our enemies.” Gortigern answered, “Let ambassadors go for soldiers;” and they went^r; and there came eighteen ships with chosen soldiers out of Germany. In this fleet^s came his daughter to Hengist: she was the fairest of the women of all Lochland^t.

^u Great banquet.—Fléið, D. ρλειδ, B. ρλεαδ μορ, L.; this last reading has been followed. In the next line L. reads ρλυαδ υιτε, for ρλυαδ : μδ has been added from L. and B. The name here given to this royal house is in the Latin Nennius given to Gortigern's interpreter: "Fecit convivium Hengistus Guorthigirno regi, et militibus suis, et interpreti suo qui vocabatur Cerdicselmet."—Bertram, c. 36: and the name is variously given Cerdic Elmet, Ceretece, Cerdic, Ceretic; and in the Irish copies, Celezielmed, L. Cepeticelemet, B. Centic Elmit, D. The reading of B. has been followed in the text, and it is very probable that the original meaning of the Irish translator was, that the banquet was given "in the house of the king, whose name was Cereticus Elmet, i.e. Cereticus king of Elmet," although, as

All, this, however, is a mistake. A certain Ceretic of Elmet was Hengist's interpreter, being acquainted with the British and Saxon languages. See Nennius, cap. 36. Marcus, p. 66. There is an Ulmetum or Elmet in Yorkshire, called Elmed-setna in Gale's Hiida Cis-Humberana, apud xv. Scriptores, p. 748; from which Leeds was anciently Loidis in Elmeto, and where Berwick in Elmet now remains, a place at or near which the Northumbrian kings once had their palace. It is the Silva Elmete of Bede, Hist. ii. cap. 14. Camden Brit. ii. 90, 1. Thoresby's Ducatus, by Whitaker, p. 232. Building on this passage of the Historia Britonum, the author of Bertram's Supplement, p. 142, says, that Edwin, son of Ella, "regnavit annis xvii, et ipse occupavit Elmet, et expulit Certec regem illius regionis." But Edwin's reign was no earlier than 616–33. There must have been

After this Hengist prepared a great banquet^u for Gortigern and his army in the royal house, which is called Centie Elinit; and none of the Britons knew the Saxon language except one man only. The daughter of Hengist proceeded to distribute the feast, viz., wines and ales, in vessels of gold and silver^v, until the soldiers were incebriated and cheerful^w; and a demon entered Gortigern, from love of the daughter of Hengist^x, and he sent the linguist to Hengist to ask her for the king; and he said^y, that “whatever he would ask for her dowry should be given to him.” Hengist, by the advice of the Saxons, said, “Let there be given to us the land which is named Congarlona^z in the Saxon language, and Ceint in the British language, elm forests in Britain, besides that in Deira, which makes the situation not certain. Cerdic being a Saxon name, and Ceretic a known way of writing Caredig, it is not obvious of which nation the interpreter was; but the transcribers of Nennius take him for a Briton, and indeed his being of a given place implies he was a native.—(H.) Hengist’s name is spelt $\Theta\eta\gamma\iota\tau$ in L. throughout, and $\text{Α}\eta\gamma\iota\tau$ in D.—(T.)

And Hengist said to Gortigern: "I will be thy father and thy counsellor, and if thou takest my advice the other tribes will not be able in any way to molest thee; and I will send^b to Lochland for my son, and for the son of his mother's sister, and they will fight against the enemy who have reached as far as the wall Gual."^c Gortigern said, "Let them be invited;" and they were invited; and there arrived Ochta^d, son of Engist, and Ebisa, with forty ships; and they plundered the Orkney islands on coming from the north, and they took many lands as far as the Friseg sea^e, that is the sea which is to the north of the Gaedhal. And ambassadors were further sent by Hengist for more ships, and a new force used to arrive every year, so that they increased, and filled the land from the island of Teneth to Cantarborgh^f.

The devil deeming it but little the evil that Gortigern had done, induced him to cohabit with his own daughter, so that she bare him a son. When German^g heard of this, he went, accompanied by a clergyman

 leave of Britain in 447, and Vortigern is said to have died circa 484, which is consistent with his having a child some years old, at that time. But it is evident that his unpopularity commenced several years later, when he attached himself to the Saxons, whose original invitation was subsequent to St. German's death; and so far from being an unpopular act, was not even the king's act, but one resolved upon by all the consiliarii.—Gildas, cap. 23.

 Therefore these statements are false; and the entire charge of incest is open to

clergyman^b of his nation, i. e. British, to eriminate and check Gortigern; and he assembled all the laity and clergy of Britain for this purpose, and also for the purpose of consulting about the Saxons. But Gortigern told his daughter, “When they are all assembled together, give thou thy child into the breast of German, and say that he is his father.” And the daughter did so. German received the child, and said unto him, “I will be thy father,” said he; and German asked for a razor, scissars, and a comb, and gave them into the hands of the infant; and this was done; and German said: “My son, give these into the hand of thy carnal father;” and the infant advanced, and gave the comb, the scissars, and the razor, into the hand of Gortigern, and said, “O my master,” said he, “do thou tonsure me, for thou art my carnal father. German is my father in the faith.” Gortigern blushed at this, and became much enraged, and fled from the assembly; and he was cursed by all the British peopleⁱ, and excommunicated by German also.

DRUIDS.

XVIII. And afterwards Gortigern invited to him twelve Druids, that he might know from them what was proper to be done. The Druids said^k to him, “Seek the borders of the island of Britain, and thou shalt find a strong fortress to defend thyself against the foreigners to whom thou hast given up thy country and thy kingdom, for thine enemies will slay thee^l, and will seize upon thy country and lands after thee.” Gortigern, with his hosts and with word Dinn, which is found in many names of places in Ireland (as Dinn Righ, near Leighlin), and in the name of the ancient treatise Dinn-Senchus, (the History of Dinns) is synonymous with Dun, a fort.

 It seems to be here used in its original signification of a high or naturally fortified hill. It is explained enoc, a hill, in old Glossaries.—(T.)

^p Carried away.—Similar traditions exist in connexion with the erection of many churches in Ireland, viz., that what was built in the course of the day was thrown down at night by some unknown power. Mr. O'Donovan found this tradition told of the church of Banagher, in the county of Derry, and has given an account of it in a letter preserved among the Ordnance Survey papers, Phoenix Park, Dublin.—(T.)

^r Let his blood be sprinkled.—Eappan-tep, L., has been substituted in the text,

his Druids, traversed all the south of the island of Britain, until they arrived at Guined^m, and they searched all the mountain of Hererⁿ, and there found a Dinn^o over the sea, and a very strong locality fit to build on; and his Druids said to him, "Build here thy fortress," said they, "for nothing shall ever prevail against it." Builders were then brought thither, and they collected materials for the fortress, both stone and wood, but all these materials were carried away^p in one night; and materials were thus gathered thrice, and were thrice carried away. And he asked of his Druids, "Whence is this evil?" said he. And the Druids said, "Seek a son whose father is unknown^q, kill him, and let his blood be sprinkled^r upon the Dun, for by this means only it can be built."

Messengers were sent by him throughout the island of Britain to seek for a son without a father; and they searched as far as Magh Eillite^s, in the territory of Glevisic, where they found boys a hurling; and there happened a dispute between two of the boys, so that one said to the other, "O man without a father^t, thou hast no good at all." The messengers asked, "Whose son is the lad to whom this is said?" Those on the hurling green^u said, "We know not," said for δειριγδερ, D., which signifies, "let it be spread." B. reads ερραιτερ, "let it be sprinkled." The Latin is aspergatur or conspergatur.—(T.) See Additional Notes, No. XIV., for some remarks on the practice here alluded to.

said they. "his mother is here," said they^v. They asked of his mother whose son the lad was. The mother answered, "I know not," said she, "that he hath a father, and I know not how he happened to be conceived in my womb at all." So the messengers took the boy with them to Gortigern, and told him how they had found him.

XIX. On the next day the army was assembled, that the boy might be killed. And the boy was brought before the king, and he said to the king, "Wherefore have they brought me to thee?" said he. And the king said, "To slay thee," said he, "and to butcher thee, and to consecrate this fortress with thy blood." The boy said, "Who instructed thee in this?" "My Druids," said the king. "Let them be called hither," said the boy. And the Druids came. The boy said to them^w, "Who told you that this fortress could not be built until it were first consecrated with my blood?^x" And they answered not. "I know," said he; "the person who sent me to you to accuse you, is he who induced you to tell this lie^y; howbeit, O king," said he, "I will reveal the truth to thee; and I ask of thy Druids, first, what is concealed beneath this floor before us?" The Druids said, "We know not," said they. "I know," said he; "there is a lake of water there; let it [the floor] be examined and dug." It was dug, and the lake^z was found there. "Ye prophets of the king," said the boy, "tell what is in the middle of the lake?" "We know not," said they. "I know," said he, "there are two large chests of wood face to face, and let them be brought out of it." It was examined, and they were brought forth^a. "And O Druids," said the boy, "tell what is between those two wooden chests?" "We know not," said they. "I know," said he; "there is a sail-cloth there." And it was brought forth, and the sail was found^b rolled up between the two wooden chests. "Tell, O ye learned," said the boy, "what is in the middle of that cloth?" And they answered not, for they understood not. "There are two maggots there," said he, "namely, a red maggot and a white maggot. Let the cloth be unfolded." The sail-cloth was unfolded, and there were two maggots asleep in it. And the boy said, "See now what the maggots will do." They advanced towards each other, and commenced to rout, cut, and bite each other, and each maggot drove the other alternately^c to the middle of the sail and again to its verge. They did this three times. The red maggot was at first the feeble one, and was driven to the brink of the cloth; but the beautiful maggot was finally the feeble one, and fled into the lake, and the sail immediately vanished. The boy asked the Druids: "Tell ye," said he, "what doth this wonder reveal?" "We know not," said they. "I will reveal it to the king," said the boy. "The lake is the kingdom^d of the whole world, and the sail is thy kingdom, O king. And the two maggots are the two powers, namely, thy power in conjunction with the Britons, and the power of the Saxons. The red maggot, which was first expelled the kingdom, represents thy power; and the white maggot, which occupied the whole sail except a little, represents the power of the Saxons, who have taken the island of Britain, except a small part, until ultimately driven out by the power of the Britons. But do thou, O king of Britain, go away from this fortress, for thou hast not power to erect it, and search the island of Britain and thou shalt find thine own fortress." The king said, "What is thy name, O boy," said he. The youth replied, "Ambrose," said he, "is my name." (He was Embros Gleutic^e, king of Britain.) "Tell thy

U. Ampur Gleutic, L.—(T.) That is to say, Emmrys Wledig, which means Ambrosius Sovereign of the Land. But Gwledig seems also, for some unknown reason, to have been conventionally an equivalent for Aurelius; since not only Emmrys Wledig is Aurelius Ambrosius, but Cynan Wledig is Aurelius Conanus. Nennius and Taliesin identify him with Merlin, the bard and prophet, called Merddin Emmrys. Two structures bore his name, viz., the Stonehenge, called the Cor Emmrys and Gwaith Emmrys, Circle of Ambrose, or Work of Ambrose; and the Dinas Emmrys, in Snowdon, here spoken of. The latter is a roundish mound of rock, difficult of access, on the top of which are two ramparts of stone, and within them the ruins of a stone building, ten yards in length. Hard by is a place said to have been the cell of Vortigern's magicians.—Pennant's Journey to Snowdon, p. 174. The mount is said to have been called Brith,

 Where Dinas Emris stood,” &c.

Drayton, cit. ibid. p. 175.

In Triads 53 and 101, the Dinas Emmrys is called Dinas Faraon, that is, Enclosure of the Higher Powers or Spiritual Beings. The last of these Triads states, that an eagle's pullet, brought forth by a sow, was intrusted to the keeping of Brynach the Irishman of Dinas Faraon. It was clearly a building appropriated to magical uses.—(II.)

† Gnomis.—So all the Irish MSS. read. The Latin MSS. vary considerably.—(T.) The translator, having begun the story by stating that Gwynedd (or North Wales), and Mount Eryri (or Snowdon), were in the South of Britain, seems to repeat the thy race," said the king. "My father," said he, "was a Roman consul, and this shall be my fortress." Then Gortigern left the fortress to Ambrose, and also the government of all the west of Britain, and went with his Druids to the north of the island of Britain, that is, to the land which is called Gunnis^f, and built a fortress there, which city is named Caer Gortigern^g.

OF THE WARFARE^h OF GORTIMER.

XX. After this, Gortimerⁱ the victorious, son of Gortigern, with his brother Catigern^j, rose up against Hengist and Orsa, and the Britons fought fiercely along with them, so that they drove the Saxons to name of Gwynedd, in the travestied form of Gunnis, and place it in the north. In the first place the Latin copies have Guoienit and Guenet, and in the second, Gwnnessi, Gueness, and Gueneri. Probably the same name is meant in both instances, for Gwnnessi is said to be in the sinistral or northern part of Britain. But it is false that Caer Guortigern was either in Gwynedd, or any where in the north. And the whole sentence, "et ipse cum magis suis ad sinistram plagam pervenit," etc., seems to be an ignorant interpolation.

ⁱ Gortimer.—The reading of U. has been adopted as being in accordance with the Latin. D. reads Ḑorþimgerþn. The other MSS. read Ḑorþmthimerþn, L. Ḑorþihgerþn, B.—(T.)

^j Catigern.—This name occurs here in D. only. The Latin makes no mention of the brother, but reads, "et cum gente illorum." There is much confusion in the Irish copies about these names, and even in the same copy uniformity is not preserved. For Gortimer we find, Gortimgernd, Goirnthigern, Gornthimern, Goirtimper, Goithemir, &c. For Catigern, Cathgearn, Cantigern, Cern, &c. It has been thought better, however, to preserve uniformity in the translation.—(T.) The Catigern of the Latin copies is Cyn-deyrn in Welsh, to which Kentigern is the equivalent, both meaning Chief Prince; but Cathigern, Battle Prince, is quite a distinct word; which discrepancy is unaccounted for.—(H.)

^k Deirgbeint.—That this battle of the Darent was distinct from that of Crayford (which, in fact, is not on the Darent), appears from Henry of Huntingdon, p. 310, 311. Ailsford, on the Medway, is supposed to be the Saxon Eppisford, and the British Set Thergabail, Sathenegabail, or Rit Hergabail of Nennius. Being a Vadum, Rit is clearly right; and Saisenagaball, destruction of the Saxons, is perhaps the title of that ford. But Camden, unless he had other copies, incorrectly states that Nennius hath told us it was so called, because of the Saxons being vanquished there.—1. p. 260. Gibson. The last of these battles was at the "Lapis Tibi super ripam Galliei maris," which the most probable conjecture places at Folk-stone; whereof the name almost implies that the people had some rights, sanctions, or usages (some titulus) connected with a stone.—(II.)

Here three battles only are mentioned, as in Bertran's Nennius, cap. 45. The word muliebiter is inserted from the Latin, "et ipsi in fugam usque ad to the island of Teineth, and the Britons took this island thrice from them; so that forces arrived to their assistance out of Germany, and they fought against the Britons, and were one time victorious and another time defeated.

And Gortimer gave them four battles, viz., a battle on the bank of the Deirgbeint^k; a battle on the bank of Rethenegabail, in which Orsa and Catigern, son of Gortigern, were slain; and a battle on the shore of the Iccian sea, where they drove the Saxons to their ships, muliebriter; and a battle on the banks of Episfort^l. Gortimer died soon after^m, and he said to the Britons shortly before his death, to bury him on the brink of the sea, and that the strangers would never afterwards come into the island. The Britons did not do thisⁿ. After this the power of the Saxons increased, for Gortigern was their friend on account of his wife.

In the Latin, Episford is made identical with the second battle-field: "super vadum quod dicitur in lingua eorum Episford, in nostra autem lingua Sathenegabail."—Bertram. ⁿ The Britons did not do this, etc.—Gortimer is the Vortimer of Latin, and the Gwrtheyyr of Welsh, history; celebrated both as a saint and a warrior, and surnamed Bendigaid, or the Blessed. What the Britons are here, and in Geoffrey, said not to have done, they are elsewhere reported to have done. The bones of Gwrtheyyr Vendigaid were buried in the chief ports of the island, and whilst they were concealed, the oppression of the island was impossible. But Vortigern of the Perverse Mouth revealed his bones, out of love for Ronwen, daughter of Hien-

^p Sandals.—According to the Latin, the Saxons were directed by Hengist to bring each an artavus, or small pocket-knife, "in medio ficonis sui," i. e. in his shoe or boot.—(H.)

^r Gortigern.—Literally, "the person," or "the man Gortigern;" in i, D. m m, U., L. m si, B. This prefix is not to be understood as implying any contempt or depreciation of Gortigern, but rather the contrary.—(H.)

XXI. Now it came to pass after the death of Gortimer, and after the peace between Hengist and Gortigern, that the Saxons committed an act of treachery upon the Britons; that is, the Britons and Saxons were assembled together in equal numbers in one place, as if in peace^o, viz., Hengist and Gortigern, neither party having arms; but the Saxons carried knives concealed between them and their sandals^p, and they killed all the Britons who were there except Gortigern alone, and they fettered Gortigern, and he gave the one-third of his land for the sparing of his life^a, viz., All-Saxan, and Sut-Saxan, and Mitil-Saxan.

Now German had admonished Gortigern^r to put away his wife, that is, his own daughter^s; but he fled away from German, and concealed himself in the land which is named Gortigernmain; and German, with the clergy of Britain, went after him, and remained there for forty days and nights; and Gortigern fled again^t from the clergy to his fortress, and they followed him and tarried there three days and three nights fasting. And the fire of God from heaven burned Gortigern^u there, with all his people. Others assert that he inserted from U., B., and L. The incest of Gortigern is only mentioned in the MS. edited by Mr. Gunn, and in the margin of the Cottonian MS. Caligula, A. viii. See Stevenson.—(I.) This whole affair is very doubtful. See p. 89. But here the falsehood is manifest; for the plot of knives is usually attributed to the year 473, and at any rate German died one year before Hengist's first arrival in 449.—(II.)

^r Fled again.—There is a confusion here, from its not being clearly expressed that Gortigern had two places of refuge. First, he went to the district of Guorti-

gerniawn, where it is not doubted Caer Guortigern was situate; and, being pursued by Germanus and his priests, and dreading their power, he removed thence to another fort of his called Din Gortigern, in Dyved or Demetia, on the banks of the Tivy. So it is styled in Gale's text; but Mr. Gunn's has "Cair Guorthegirn juxta flumen Tebi," which I conceive to be erroneous.—(II.)

^u Gortigern.—Literally, "the person Gortigern." See above, note^r; m n, U. m o, omitted in D. L. does not name Gortigern here, but reads m τῆσραρα ρm.—(I.)

^v Died of grief and tears, etc.—But certainly far advanced in years. His reputed tomb, called the Bedd Gwrtheyrn or Grave of Vortigern, is still seen at Llanhaiarn in Carnarvonshire, and was found to contain the bones of a man of lofty stature. See Carte i. 196. The Beddau Milwyr, st. 40, says that the tomb in Ystyvachau is supposed by all men to be that of Gwrtheyrn or Vortigern.—(II.)

^w Three sons.—That is to say, Vortigern had three legitimate sons, or such as the British recognised for princes. Nothing is known of this Saint Faustus, nor doth there seem to be any church or convent of his invocation. The Reins or Reins, at which Faustus (not Germanus, as here) built a locus magnus, has been conjectured to be the Rumney, dividing Glamorgan from Monmouth.—Ussher, Brit. Eccl. Primord. Appx. p. 1002. One manuscript calls him S. Faustus Secundus. A Briton of the name of Faustus was bishop of Riez, in Gaul, and honoured as a saint

(Vide Aub. Miræum in Gemadum, cap. 61), though by some condemned as heretical. He flourished in the days of Vortigern, and kept up a correspondence with Britannia. See Sidonius Apollinaris, Lib. ix. Epist. 9. A fourth son ascribed to Vortigern is Gotta, whom his Saxon wife, Rowena, is said to have borne to him, and to whom Vortigern is said to have given (i. e. limited in succession) the crown of Britain.—Triad. 21, series 3. Lastly, Mr. R. Rees mentions three saintly sons of Vortigern, St. Edeyrn, who formed a convent of 300 monks at Llanedeyrn, near the Rumney above-mentioned, St. Aerdeyrn, and St. Eldeyrn.—Essay on Welsh Saints, p. 186. All these names are formed, like Gwrtheyrn's own, upon teyrn, a prince. Pascent is the most authentic of his imputed progeny.—(II.)

he died of grief and tears^r, wandering from place to place. Another authority asserts that the earth swallowed him up the night on which his fortress was burnt.

XXII. He had three sons^w, viz., Gortimper, who fought^x against the Saxons; Catigern; Pascant, to whom Ambrose the king of Britain gave Bocuelt and Gortigermmain, after the death of his father; Saint Faustus^y, his son by his own daughter, and whom Germain baptized, fostered, and instructed, and for whom he built a city on the brink of the River Raen^z. Nennius^a said this.

^b Fearmael.—Fermael (Strong-ankles), Firmwail, or Fermail, was a petty prince, reigning when the Historia was compiled. The same name occurs in Ferwail, Fermael, or Fermael, son of Idwal, in the Brut Tywys, and Saeson, p. 391, 473, and (as I conceive) in King Farinmagil, slain at the battle of Deorham.—Henr. Huntingd. p. 315. Fermael I take to be the true form and etymon, according to the orthography of these days. His genealogy (which Gale attributes to that bugbear, Samuel) is in every copy and edition. Pascentius, son of Vortigern, was permitted (as the Historia has already told us) to retain Buellt, a district of Radnor, where stood the ancient Bullæum Silurum, and Guorthigerniawn or Gwrtheyrniawn, i. e. the Jurisdiction of Vortigern or Gwrtheyrn, a district adjoining the other in the direction of Rhaiadrwy, whereof the name yet survives in the ruined castle of Gwrthrenion.

This patrimony of Pascent ap Gwrtheyrn descended from him, through ten intermediates, to Fermael, son of Theodore or Tudor. All copies exactly agree in the pedigree, save that one or two have mistaken Vortigern's opprobrious surname, Gwrthenau, Perverse-Mouthed, for a separate person. It is not likely that such particular accounts should be given of the fate of Vortigern's estates in Radnorshire, and of the descent of their actual owner, save by a person specially acquainted with those parts. But that impression rises into conviction, when we find that every copy of the catalogue of the twenty-eight cities of Britannia, including that copied into the Harleian

MS. of pedigrees, places Caer Guortigern, the capital of Guortigerniawn, first in the list of cities, before London, York, Caerleon upon Usk and upon Dee, and whatever was most famous in the island! The place in question was, on the face of it, no older than the fifth century; and, from its wild and mountainous site, could have been little more than a military fastness. This is such palpable exaggeration and flattery as may best be accounted for by supposing Guorthigerniawn to have been the author's native land, and Fernmael his lord and patron.—(II.)

^c Tedubre, son of Paistcenn.—That is to say, Theodore or Tudor, son of Pascent. The authenticity of this pedigree from Vortigern derives some support from the recurrence of Pascent's name. At least, if it be a fiction, it throws back the invention of it to Fernmael's grandfather, or rather to that grandfather's sponsors.—(II.) This genealogy is given in the MSS. with great variations in the spelling of the names. D. is followed in the text. U. gives them thus: Fearmael, Teudubri, Pascent, Guodicator, Morut, Eldat, Eldoc, Paul, Meppit, Briacat, Pascent, Gorthigernd, Guitail, Guitoilin, Glou. L. gives them thus: Fearmael, Teudbri, Pasceand, Guodicatur, Muirind, Eltaid, Eltog, Paul, Meppret, Bricad, Pascent, Gorthigern, Gutail, Gutolin, Golu. B. has them thus: Fernmael, Teudbri, Pasceann, Guodicant, Muriut, Eldat, Eldoc, Paul, Meppit, Bricat, Pascent, Gorthigern, Gutail, Gutolin, Glou.

Bonus, Paul, and Muron were three other sons of Glou, who built the city of Caer Glou^d, i. e. Gloucester, on the banks of the Severn. German returned home to his own country^e.

XXIII. At this time Patrick was in captivity in Eri with Miliuc; and it was at this time that Pledius was sent to Eri to preach to them. Patrick went to the south^f to study, and he read the canons with German. Pledius was driven from Eri, and he went and served God in Fordun in Mairne. Patrick came to Eri after studying, and baptized the men of Eri. From Adam to the baptizing of the men of Eri were five thousand three hundred and thirty years. To describe the miracles of Patrick to you, O men of Eri, were to bring water

For Gloucester we have Gluseghter, B. Gluseither, L. Glusester, U., D.—(T.) For some remarks on Gorthigern, son of Guatal, see Additional Notes, No. XVI.

^d Caer Glou.—This statement is not in all the Latin copies, and is deservedly accounted fabulous. For Caer Gloui or Gloucester is the Glevum of the Itinerarium Antonini, a work not later than the fourth century. And the idea of Gloui building cities east of the Severn implies a measure of Celtic independence and sovereignty which did not exist in the days of the Itinerary, nor in those of Vortigern's grandfather.—(H.)

suam."—(T.)

^f To the south.—In the Latin, "Romam usque perrexit;" but there is no mention there of Patrick's studying the canons with German. In describing the mission of Palladius, the Latin adopts the words of Prosper in his Chronicle: "Missus est Palladius episcopus primitus a Celestino episcopo et papa Romæ ad Scottos in Christum convertendos."—(T.) The translator of Nennius deservedly rejects his sketch of St. Patrick's life and miracles, as a mere drop of water or grain of sea-sand. But he is himself much at variance with the popular hagiography, if he conceives Patrick to have been still a captive to Miliuc M^c Cuboin, the Dalara-dian magician, at the time when Palladius was sent. The mission of St. Patrick to

^h Arthur and the Britons.—Mr. Bertram's edition inserts, before the mention of Arthur, "hic expliciunt gesta Britonum a Nennio conscripta;" from which some have thought this history was originally silent as to Arthur. But all MSS. agree in containing his legend, and the mistake arose thus:—That colophon is subjoined to the Acts of St. Patrick; but in some copies, particularly the Marcian or Mr. Gunn's, those Acts form the conclusion of the Historia; and some of the editorial copyists, while transferring them to the middle, took along with them the expliciunt or colophon.—(II.) In the following account of Arthur's battles, the text of all the MSS. of the Irish is very corrupt, particularly D.; it has been corrected by the help of the Latin from B., L., and U., but it would be a waste of time to specify all the variations, most of which are the blunders of mere ignorance. The

The ninth battle was at Caþraꝥ mo Zeoman, U., L., B. Caþraꝥ mo Zeoꝥom, D., which agrees with the Latin. The tenth at Robnoꝥ, U., L., B. Robnoꝥ, D. The eleventh is omitted in all the Irish MSS., nor do they name the twelfth; in what they say of it they all agree with the text except D., where the scribe wrote α ο ο ε γ η ρ α η η ρ ο η α η β, and there stopped short without finishing the sentence.—(T.)

ⁱ Twelve battles.—This was the favourite and mystic number of the British nations. St. Patrick is made (by the author of the very barbarous productions bearing his name) to boast of having gone through duodena pericula. It is unknown where these battles were fought, and it is mere guess-work, from resemblance of sound and other trifles. I. Gleni, or Glein, is a name consistently given, and therefore not to be treated ad libitum. The river Glen by Glenford, in Lincolnshire, is recommended by Gale. There is also the Glen of Glendale, in Northumberland, fluvius Gleni, in which Paulinus baptized multitudes. Bede, Hist. ii., cap. 14.—II., III.,

IV., V. The river Douglas or Dubglas may be the dark green or blue (for glas is either), or rather the dark stream, from the Gaelic glaise, a stream. It is said to be the Douglas in Lancashire, that runs by Wigan.—R. Higd. Polychron. p. 225, Gale. But if so the regio Linnuis, Linnuis, Linnis, or Limus, cannot be Lindsey, Lindissi of Bede, in Lincolnshire. Indeed, the Archdeacon of Huntingdon calls it regio Innis.—Hist. ii. p. 313. Mr. Whitaker speaks of a local tradition that three battles were fought near Wigan, but omits to observe, that the tradition probably came from those very chronicles, of which it is therefore insufficient to determine the sense.—Hist. Manchester, ii. p. 36, 43. There is also the river Douglas, in Clydesdale, more famous for the family who took its name, than for its own dark waters. VI. Bassas of Nennius, Lusas of the Marcan manuscript, is unascertainable. But a place called Eglwysan Bassa, the Churches of Bassa, is prominently mentioned in Llywarch's Elegy upon Cynddylan. Near that place, Cynddylan and Elvan of Powys were slain by the Lloegrians, or Britons west of

However, Mr. Carte has imagined the Bassas to be the river of Basingstoke and Basing, in Hants; i. p. 205. VII. The seventh was cael coed Celyddon, the battle of the wood of Forests. Celyddon is a general name for any tract of woodlands so extensive as to furnish shelter and baffle pursuers, of which the ancient orthography was expressed in Latin, Caledonia or Calidonia.—See Florus, cap. xi. This battle may have been fought in any celyddon or vast forests; in the sylvia Caledonia of Cæsar in Florus; in Caledonia north of Clyde; or where the fortress of Pensavle-coed was built. Geoffrey of Monmouth, ix. cap. 3, places the battle of Nenus Caledonis in Lindsey, near Lincoln; but as he clearly mistakes the position of Caer Loid Coed, his rectified sense would place it in the Sylva Elmete of Leeds. VIII. Castellum Gunion, Guinion, Guimer. This place is simply unknown. The Vinovium of Ptolemy, Vinovia of Antoninus, and Vinonia of Ravennas, is mentioned in Messrs. Gunn's and Stevenson's Notes. It is now called Binchester, in Durham. There is also a Vennonis (High-Cross), otherwise Vinonium, in Antoninus. Gwyniawn, in modern spelling, is probably the word intended by Nennius, whatever place he may have meant. An interpolation (absent from Marcus and various other MSS., as well as from this translation), adds to the portrait of the Holy Virgin an account of a wooden cross made at Jerusalem, whereof the reliques were preserved at Wedale, near Melrose. IX. Urbs Legionis or Caer Lleon, was a name commonly applied to two cities, that upon the Usk in Gwent or Monmouthshire, and that upon the Dee, now called Chester. It does not appear which is specified, but northern places seem rather to be in question. X. Upon the river Tratreuroit, Trath-treuroit, Tribruit, Ribroit, or Arderit, it may be observed that the four first readings represent the same, and the real appellation; while the intrusion of the celebrated, but not Arthurian, battle of Arderydd is an impertinence. A trath or traeth is not properly a river, but an inlet of the sea, a tract of the mouth of the river Glein; the second, the third, the fourth, and the fifth battle, on the brink of the river Dubhglas; the sixth battle on the brink of the Bassa; the seventh battle in the wood of Callidon, that is, Cait Coit Cleiduman; the eighth battle at Lesc Guinidon; it was here Arthur carried the image of Mary on his shoulder, and drove out the Pagans; the ninth battle at the city of Legion;

marsh, or other shallow and sandy place usually covered with water; such as the Traeth Mawr, Traeth Bychan, and Traeth Artro in Merioneth, and Traeth Taffe in Glamorgan; and the word traeth-llyn (ap. Camden, ii. 46), a quagmire. “Dicitur autem Traeth linguâ Cambricâ sabulum mari influente longius, et se retrahente, nudatum.”—Giraldus Camb. Itin. Camb. ii. cap. 6. Of Traeth Trev there is no room for doubt; but the difficulty is to meet the analogies of the ancient Welsh spelling, which is preserved in roit and ruit. Perhaps Traeth-trevrhydd (the frith, or marshy channel, of the open or unenclosed habitation) is the name. But the name is easier found than the place. XI. The eleventh battle (here omitted) was at Agned Cathregonion, Cath-Bregon, or Thabregomion; or, as Marcus has it, “in Monte Breguoin . . . quem nos Cat Bregon appellamus.” Humfrey Llwyd says, “Edenburgum, Scotorum regia, olim ab Eboraco Britannorum rege condita, et Castell Mynydd Agned, id est, Castellum Montis Agneti, postea verò Castellum Virginum, dicta.”—Comment. p. 62. That suffices for the place. As to its additional name, we see clearly from Marcus, as well as from the reason of the thing, that the Cat is added in consequence of the battle; and I believe that Agned Brechion, Agnetum Maculis-distinctorum, was simply expressive of the nation to whom that fortress is said to have belonged, Edinburgh of the Picts. XII. The place, which is omitted here, was Mons Badonis. “Ad annum obsessionis Montis Badonici, qui prope Sabrinum ostium habetur, novissimæque ferè de furciferis non minimæ stragis.”—Gildas, Hist. cap. 26. Landdowne Hill, above Bath, is supposed to be signified; and no doubt can exist of Badon being Bath, or, more strictly, the Baths. Mr. Carte’s conceit, that Mount Badon is Badbury Hill, on the borders of Wiltshire, towards Berkshire, is fully confuted by “propè Sabrinum ostium.” The “novissima ferè strages” of Gildas suggested to the Historia Britonum its duodecimum bellum, or last battle.—(H.) For the history of Arthur and his twelve battles, see “Assertio incomparabilis Arthuri autore Joanne Lelando, Antiquario.” Lond. 1544. Reprinted in Leland’s Collectanea, vol. v. p. 17, &c.—(T.)

^j Eight hundred and forty men, &c.—So all but Gunn's MS., which is represented as having DCCCCXL. This statement is less hyperbolical, though it may be more mysterious, in its real than in its apparent sense. Like 7 to the Hebrews, 12 was to the Britons the absolute number, significant of perfection, plenitude, and completeness. But they had also a way of expressing that number by various other numbers, of which the cyphers added together make 12. So, at his great synod of Llan-Ddewi Brevi, St. David assembled 7140 saints; at the battle of knives, or of Hengist's banquet, Eidiol Gadran, with the branch of a roan tree, slew 660 Saxons; and here, Arthur, with his own sword, slays 840. In some remarkable instances the numbers 147 and 363 were so employed; and from each number deductions of seven and three were made respectively, the object of which affected deductions was to shew the principle; for 7 from 147 leaves 1 and 4, i. e. 5, being the remainder of 7 from 12; and in the like manner 3 from 363 leaves 9. The direct demonstration of the fact is found in the statement, where twelve years of well-known chronology (the reign of one king) are termed teir blynedd trugein a thrychant, 363 years.—Cyvoesi Merddin st. 106. The motives for such a practice are not obvious. In Triad 85, the number 21,000, thrice repeated, is characteristic of three. The matter is also curious, as regards the main principle of what we term Arabic numerals.—(H.)

^k Until Ida.—“Usque ad tempus quo Ida filius Eobba regnavit, qui fuit primus rex in Bernicia, id est, Iberneich, de gente Saxonum.”—Nennius, cap. 63. Cambricē y Berneich or Bryneich. This is the Inbher Onic of the Irish translator, which, however, he correctly places north of Humber.—(H.) This passage is greatly corrupted in L.: co h-īda is transformed Legion; the tenth battle at Robruid; in the twelfth battle there were slain, by the hand of Arthur, eight hundred and forty men¹ in one day, and he was victorious in all these battles. And the Saxons sought assistance from Germany, and it was from thence they brought their kings until the time of Ida^k, who was the first king that ruled over them at this side of Inbher Onic, that is, to the north of Umbria [Humber]. Ida was the son of Ebba. Enfled, the daughter of Edwin^l, was the first of the Saxons that was baptized in the island of Britain.

INCIPIIT CONCERNING THE WONDERS OF THE ISLAND OF BRITAIN^m HERE.

XXV. The first wonder of the island of Britain is Loch Lemnon; there are sixty islands and sixty rocks in it, and sixty streams flow into it, and one stream out of it, that is the Leamainⁿ.

The

into conao, and uoacab ipop into uzeibe pop, which is nonsense. For Inber Onic this MS. reads Inbeneopao .i. abpa a zuaic. D. reads Inbhir Onic .i. pop muip auaio. U. reads In bene poic .i. ppi Umbria auaio, and B. has it In beneoic .i. ppi Ubra a zuaic.—(T.)

¹ Enfled, daughter of Edwin.—Her baptism by St. Paulinus is related in Bede, 2, cap. 9. The mention of her occurs in the midst of those “Saxonum et aliarum genealogiæ gentium”, which Nennius, at the suggestion of Beulan the priest, “noluit scribere;” but which Bertram and Mr. Stevenson have printed from varying copies. The remarks originally made on the mode in which the Historia was treated explain the force of scribere. Nennius was dissuaded from including them in his edition. The translator Gua-

nach must have been in possession of the Genealogiæ, but imitated Beulan’s pupil in the rejection of them, only culling out of them this sentence about Eanfled, because of the religious interest it possessed.—(H.) The MSS. of the Irish version differ here, as in other cases where there are proper names: Iba mac Euba. Eanplech ingen Eoum, U. Iba filiur Eabba. Eanpleiz filia Eoum, D. Iba mac Euba. Eanpleo ingen Eoum, B. Iba mac Eoba. Eanpleo, no Eeine, ingean Aedam, L. Here the copies of this work in the Book of Ballymote and in the Leabhar na h-Uidhri end; at the end of the copy of the Book of Ballymote are the words pmiic do’n dpeacnoic, “Britainism (i.e. the history of Britain) ends.”—(T.)

^m Wonders of the island of Britain—The legend of St. Patrick seems to be

ῥρια αεν ταινῶ, ἡ τῥαγ αινυλ [εαῶ] μινυ εἰλε.

scriptum in all the copies, and there is not "aliquod volumen Britanniae" that contains it not. But it is otherwise with the Genealogia; and also with the Mirabilia, which various copies, and the two first editors in print, have not included. Mr. Stevenson has printed them, to the number of thirteen, which is also the number in the Irish. But the sixth and seventh of the Irish translation are made out of the seventh of the Latin; the eleventh is the twelfth; the twelfth and thirteenth do not occur in the Latin; neither do the Latin sixth and thirteenth occur in the translation. The Wallia Mirabilia, given in verse by Ralph Higden, appear to me to be only twelve in number; but it is uncertain whether one mirabile at Basingwerk is intended, or two, in which latter case there are thirteen. There is not above one of them that coincides with Nennius's; but, however varied in the selection of instances, the mirabilia seem to have had a fixed and conventional number. That number, 13, I conceive to be the same sacred number, 12, above spoken of; the difference being that of the zodiacal number with or without the sun, and the apostolic number with or without its Head. The British 13 is not quite unlike the Hebrew 8, being the overflowing of fulness. The thirteen natural mirabilia of Britain form a counterpart to its thirteen tlysau, i. e. jewels, toys, or trinkets, being magical talismans of the most portentous virtue; of which a catalogue is printed in the Mabinogi of Kilhwch, p. 353-5, and another in Hynavion Cymreig, p. 67. Caervyrddin, 1823.—(II).

ⁿ The Leomain — Lake Lomond in Scotland is here greatly shorn of its marvels. The Latin places an eagle upon each rock, cap. 67, Stevenson. But Geoffrey adds, that once a year the sixty eagles assembled together, and sang aloud their prophecies of whatever events were about to happen.—Lib. ix. cap. 6. Also in Gervas of Tilbury, De Regno Britonum, p. 44. The Leomain here, and Lenin or Lem of the Latin, is the river Levin, flowing out of Lomond into the Clyde, by the famous fortress of Aleclyde or Dumbarton.—(II.) L. reads Coeh Coma. D. makes the number of islands, rocks and streams xl. instead of lx.; the transposition of the x is easy, but the number of rocks and streams is written in full, εεαθη-ῥααα. L. reads sixty in each case; and after the sixty rocks, adds, ἡ μεῶ ἀποῖθ

The second wonder is the mouth of the stream Tranon, which is filled from the bottom with one wave, and ebbs like every other sea.

The third wonder^p is the fiery waters.

The fourth wonder is the fountain of salt which is there.

The fifth wonder, i. e. two bubbles^q of froth at the mouth of the Sabrain in each. Laemhain (in the Latin copies Lenin and Leun), the name of the river running out of this lake, is also the name of a river in the Co. Kerry in Ireland, which runs into the Lake of Killarney, and of another in Scotland, from which the district of Lennox, anciently Leamhain, or Magh Leamhna, has its name.—(T.)

^o Tranon.—Trans Hannoni, Thrannoni, Strannoni, Trahannoni, is Traeth Anton, the estuary of the Anton or Southampton river, Ptolemy's Mouth of the Trisanton, Τρισάντωνος ποταμοῦ ἐκβολαί.—See Gibson's Camden's Britannia, p. 212; Nennius, cit. ibid. In Italian romance, Bevis of Hampton is Buovo d'Antona. The name Tris-Anton comes from tri, three, indicating the triple form of the enclosure made by the Isle of Wight, and consisting of the Hampton river and the two channels of Ryde and Yarmouth; as also Clausentum, for the same waters, signified the Enclosure of Anton. The name Anton itself is simply free from waves or billows, as all sheltered waters are, to the extent and degree of their shelter. This foolish wonder seems only to describe the violence of a spring-tide.—(H). L. reads,

^p Third wonder.—This is in regione Haich. The waters were in a paved bath, and were either hot or cold, according to the bather's wish. The fourth wonder, in the same region, is no wonder at all; but the writer imagined there was no salt in the earth, only in the sea.—(H.)

^q Two bubbles.—D. reads θα βυλιγ ἡ-lum βιθε, which is plainly corrupt. The reading of L. has been followed. In the Latin, "Duo Rig Habren," which is interpreted, "duo reges Sabrinae;" ριγ is a king in Irish; but could duo rig mean the two rams, from the Celtic ρεῖρε, which would be easily confounded with ριγ in sound? The Latin adds: "et bellum faciunt inter se in modum arietum."—(T.) The Latin says, "When the sea is poured into the mouth of the Severn to a full head of water, ["Ad sissam—in unâquâque sissâ." Sissa is a known corruption of assisa, and I do not clearly know what the assize of water is, but I suppose it to be water brought to a head, as at mill-dams. Ducange cites, from a charter of A. D. 811, "aquas et assisas aquarum." two heaps of surf are collected on either hand, and make war against each other like rams; and each goes against the other and they collide together, and secede again from each other, and advance again at each sissa [swell?]." This seems to be meant for a description of the phenomenon called the Bore, which may be seen in some æstuaries, among others at Bridgewater.—(II.)

⁷ Loch Heilic. — Elec, L.—(T). This Loch Heilic is called in the Latin Finnaun (or Fountain) of Guur Helic or Guor Helic, and said to be twenty feet (not cubits) square. It was in the region of Cinlipluc, Cinlipluic, or Cinloipiauc. Near it, and forming but one wonder with it in the Latin, was the river Guoy (Wye) and the apple-bearing ash. Helic means willow-trees, and is the ancient name of Ely.

There is also a place in Herefordshire called Rhyd y Helig.—(II.)

⁸ Ash tree.—Mr. O'Donovan informs me that umnpenn is still in use in the north of Ireland as the name of the ash tree; in the south and west the common word is puunpeog; but the old form is preserved in the name of the river Fuunpionn, in Cork, and in that of Αη-Ψυunpionn, or Ashford in Limerick.—(T.)

⁹ Guent.—Gwent was chiefly composed of the modern Monmouthshire. The cave is said to be entitled With Guint, that is, Gwyth Gwynt, and to mean flatio venti. Gwyth is rage or violence; but also means a channel or conduit through which anything is conveyed, and that is perhaps the sense here.—(II.) The word ροχλαθ (ροχλαε, L.), a cave, is now obsolete, but is explained a cave in Cormac's Sabrain. They encounter and break each other, and move back again, and come in collision again, and thus continue perpetually.

The sixth wonder is Loch Heilie^f, which has no water flowing into it or out of it; and there are different kinds of fishes in it at every side; and it reaches, in its depth, only to a man's knee; it is twenty cubits in length and in breadth, and has high banks.

The eighth wonder, a cave which is in the district of Guent^t, having wind constantly blowing out of it.

The ninth wonder, an altar which is in Loingraib^u. It is supported in the air, although the height of a man above the earth.

The tenth wonder, a stone which is upon a carn in Bocuilt, with the impression of the paws of Arthur's dog^v in it; and though it should be carried away to any part of the world, it would be found on the same carn again.

Glossary, and the corresponding word in the Latin is fovea. With, the name given to this cave in the Latin, and explained flatio venti, seems cognate with the Irish gæe, a blast of wind.—(T.)

^u Loingraib.—Rath, L.—(T.) The altar of Llwyngarth in Gower, upon the sea shore. The story, as told in the Latin, was this. St. Illutus beheld a ship approaching, which contained the body of a saint, and an altar suspended in air over it. He buried him under the altar, and built a church over it; but the altar continued suspended in the air. It was but slightly raised; for a regulus or local prince, being doubtful, proved the fact by passing his rod or wand under it. He was punished for his incredulity by a speedy death; and another man, who peeped under it, by blindness.—(H.)

^v Arthur's dog.—The impression upon the carn in Buellt is said to have been made by Arthur's dog, Cavall or Caball, during the chase of the porcus Troynt, i. e. the Twrch Trwyth. That famous boar had been a king, but was thus transformed, and one Taredd was his father. He was the head and summit of that pile of porcine allusions which are known to form a peculiarity of British superstition. Llywarch Hen says, in a proverbial tone,

“In need. Twrch [himself] will crack pignuts.”

Marwnad Cynddylan, st. 89.

Cavall did, indeed, hunt the Twrch

* Argingi.—In L., Erghedi.—(I.) The land of Argingi is Erging or Ergengl, called in English Erenchfield or Archenfield, a district of Herefordshire. The sepulchre in question was beside the fountain called Lieat Anir, the last word being the appellation of one of Arthur's knights, whom Arthur slew and buried at that spot. Llygad Ammir, the Eye of Ammir, is the fountain's name, and Ammir i. e. Lackland, the man's. The lengths given in the printed Latin are six, nine, and fifteen feet; and the author attests the fact on his own experience, "et ego solus probavi." One copy has "Oculus Amirmur," for which we can read "Oculus Amir Mawr."—(II.) A superstition exactly similar, connected with the Dwarf at Tara, is mentioned by Mr. Petrie, in his History and Antiquities of Tara Hill, p. 156.—(I.)

The twelfth wonder is a stone in a cataract in Brebic^x.

The thirteenth is a quern^y which constantly grinds, except on Sunday, in Machlin in Cul. It is heard working under ground.

The well of the grain is in Meadon^z, that is, a well from which grain flows without ceasing.

There is in the same district a well from which the bones of birds are constantly thrown up.

There are also innumerable birds there on a certain rock, and they dive under the sea as if into the air.

There are also limpets on the rocks there, viz., limpets at Ceoil, thirty thousand paces from the sea.

There is a valley in Aengus^a, in which shouting is heard every Monday night; Glen Ailbe is its name, and it is not known who makes the noise.

THE WONDERS OF MANANN^b DOWN HERE.

XXVI. The first wonder is a strand without a sea.

The

This wonder does not occur in the Latin. I cannot explain Brebic.—(T.)

^y A quern.—No notice of this or the succeeding “wonders,” is found in the Latin. Machlin is a town in Ayrshire, a district of Galloway, in the stewartry of Kyle; which latter is here styled Cul and Ceoil. “Eadbertus campum Cyl cum aliis regionibus suo regno addidit.”—Bedæ Epitome, A. D. 750. It is the same word as the Irish Cul.—(H.)

^z In Meadon, or “in the middle;” in

meadon is the reading of L. D. reads in megongan, “in Megongan;” but I know not what place is intended. For can anad, L. reads oo gpep, i. e. always.—(T.)

^a Aengus.—The county of Angus or Forfar in Scotland. The words and clause within brackets, and some other corrections in the text, are from L.—(T.)

^b Wonders of Manann; or the Isle of Man.—There are five such in Nennius. The fourth is thus stated: A stone walks by night in the valley of Citheinn, and once upon a time was thrown into the whirlpool Cereuus, which is in the middle of the sea called Mene, but the next day was undoubtedly found on the shore of the above-named valley.—(II.) The second wonder, “Mons qui gyratur tribus vicibus in anno,” is omitted in both the Irish copies. In the Latin, the third wonder (second in the Irish) is nothing miraculous. “Vadus quando inundatur mare et ipse inundatur,” &c.; the Irish translator perceived this, and therefore adds, ποτα οὐκ μῦρ, a ford which is far from the sea. L. makes the first and second one, thus, Τραγ cen μῦρ, .i. ἀθὴρ ποτα οὐκ μῦρ, &c. The section “De mirabilibus Hiberniæ” is omitted in the Irish copies. (T.)—See Appendix.

^c Of the Cruithnians, i. e. of the Picts. This section, which occurs only in the Books of Leacan and Ballymote, is entitled in the former Ἰο Cρωιζhecharb ἀνοπεο, do περ na n-eolach, “Of the Cruith-nians here, according to the learned.” But what follows is no part of the Britannia of Nennius, and is not found in any Latin copies. The Book of Ballymote is adopted as the basis of the text.—(T.) For a dissertation on the origin and history of the Picts, see Additional Notes, No. XVII.

^d Guelcon, son of Ercal.—Gelonus, son of Hercules by Echidna, was the ancestor of the Geloni, a people of Scythia, who painted their bodies, and are, therefore, assumed to have been the ancestors of the Picts:

Virg. Georg. ii. 115.

Some have supposed them to be a people of Thrace, or at least to have settled there in one of their migrations, because Virgil, in another place (Georg. iii. 461), says of them:

“—— Acerque Gelonus

This, perhaps, may possibly have been

The second is a ford which is far from the sea, and which fills when the tide flows, and decreases when the tide ebbs.

The third is a stone which moves at night in Glenn Cindenn, and though it should be cast into the sea, or into a cataract, it would be found on the margin of the same valley.

OF THE CRUITHNIANS^c INCIPT.

XXVII. The Cruithnians came from the land of Thracia; they are the race of Gueleon, son of Ereal^d (Hercules). Agathyrsi^e was their name. Six brothers^f of them came at first, viz., Solen, Ulfa, Nechtan, Drostan, Aengus, Leithenn. The cause of their coming^g was this, viz., Policornus, king of Thrace, fell in love with their sister, and proposed the origin of the tradition that the Picts were a Scythian people ("de Scythia, ut perhibent," says Bede, lib. i. c. 1.) who came into Ireland from Thrace. For Ḡueleom, (which has been adopted from L.), B. reads Ḡleom.—(T).

^e Agathyrsi. B. reads Αἰγαθηρσι. The Agathyrsi were a Scythian tribe, said to be descended from Agathyrsus, a son of Hercules. See above, p. 49, and note ^e. They are also called picti by Virgil, Æn. iv. 146. See the legend of the birth of Agathyrsus and Gelonus, and the cause of their being sent away from Scythia to emigrate, in Herodotus, lib. iv. c. 9, 10. The account given by Herodotus of the Agathyrsi is that their country abounded in gold, but that they were themselves effeminate, and had their women in common.—Ibid. c. 104. The story of the Agathyrsi coming first to Ireland, and being sent on from thence to North Britain, is told by Polydore Virgil and others. He says, "Quidam hos Agathyrsos esse suspicantur, Pietosque vocitatos, quod sic ora artusque pingerent, ut ablui nequirent; sed Pietos undecunque dictos, satis constat populos Scythiæ fuisse."—(lib. ii. p. 38, Edit. Basil. 1555). See also Hector Boethius (Hist. Scotorum, lib. i. fol. 4, line 50. Edit. Paris, 1575), and Fordun's Scotichronicon.—(T.)

^g Cause of their coming.—Mr. Pinkerton, who has quoted this account of the Picts from the Book of Ballymote, in the Appendix, No. 14, to his Enquiry into the History of Scotland, makes the words ἄτα α ταίατανα a proper name, and translates this passage "Facta-atiactana, alias Policronus, King of Thrace," &c.

This is only a specimen of the innumerable ludicrous mistakes which Pinkerton has committed in his translations from the Irish. In the next sentence ζαν ζορρα, signifies not "without settling a dowry on her," as Pinkerton renders it, in conformity with modern ideas, but, "without giving a dowry for her," to her father or next of kin, according to the practice of the ancients. Policornus, the fabulous King of Thrace, mentioned in this legend, is elsewhere in the Book of Ballymote (fol. 23, a. a.) called Poliornus, and in the Book of Lecan (fol. 13, b. b.), Piliornis.—See Addit. Notes, No. XVIII.—(T.)

ⁱ Pictavis.—The Lemonum of A. Hirtius de B. Gall. c. 26, and Augustoritum of Ptolemy, afterwards Pictavia or Pictavia, Pictava or Pictava, now Poitiers. Ammianus has it Pictavi, from the people, xv. c. 11; others Pictavium. Whether the Pictones or Pictavi were so called by the Romans from any usage of painting, or whether it was a native name, is uncertain. Brutus in his voyage from Troy hither visited Poictou, where Goffarius Pictus or Goffar Ficti, was then reigning.—Galfrid, Mon. i. c. 12. The derivation of this name "from their arms," alludes to the word pike in English; pic, Irish; piŷ, Welsh; picca, Italian; pica (and see also picture), apud Du Cange.—(H.) In the account already given, p. 53, supra, the Picts are described as having been first in Orkney, before they went to France and founded Poitiers. The tradition that this city owed its origin to the wandering Agathysri was also current in France. Du Chesne says: "Il est certain que Poitiers, ville principale et premiere de toute cette contrée, est tres antique, mais incertain qui en ont esté les premiers fondateurs. L'opinion de plusieurs François est que ce peuple est une ancienne Colonie des Scythes dits Agathirsés, lesquels, au dire de Pline, Pomponius et Solin, se peignoient les cheveux et le visage, afin de se rendre plus redoutables, et pour ce estoient appelez Picti. Que ces Agathirsés peints vindrent premierement planter leurs pavillons en la Grande Bretagne; ou estans multipliez se fit encore cette peuplade, laquelle vint bastir la ville de Poitiers, et l'appella Pictavis en Latin, comme ce posed to take her without giving a dower^b. They after this passed across the Roman territory into France and built a city there, viz., Pictavisⁱ, called à pictis, i. e. from their arms. And the king of France fell in love with their sister. They put to sea after the death of the sixth brother^k, viz., Leithinn; and in two days after going on the sea their sister died. The Cruithnians landed at Inbher Slaine, in Hy-Ceinnselagh. Cremhthann Sgiathbhel, King of Leinster, said that he would give them welcome on the expulsion of the Tuatha Fidhbha^l. Drostan, the Druid of the Cruithnians, ordered that the qui diroit force peinte. Ridicule opinion puis que ce peuple est avouë barbare par tous les anciens Auteurs, et partant ignorant de la lanque Latine, laquelle mesme n'estoit point alors, ou n'estoit en telle splendeur, que les estrangers en recherchassent la connaissance."—Antiquitez, &c., des Villes de France, tom. i. p. 535. John of Salisbury, in his Polycraticon, sive de Nugis Curialium, suggests also a Latin derivation (lib. i. c. 13): "Avis picta urbi Pictavorum contulit nomen, levitatem gentis colore et voce præfigurans." But all these are manifest fables, derived from fanciful analogies of sound; for the inhabitants of Poictou were known by the name of Pictones in Cæsar's time, before they had any intercourse with the Latins. This objection, however, does not apply to the derivation from pica, for that word existed also in the Celtic languages, although it may, perhaps, be as fanciful as the rest.—(T.)

reading be of any authority, it will, therefore follow, that Leithinn, though mentioned last, was the eldest brother.—(T.)

^l Tuatha Fídhbha.— $\tau\eta\upsilon\alpha\tau\eta\iota\ \Phi\iota\delta\delta\alpha$. L. No mention of this colony has been found except in this legend. Yet it is curious that the inhabitants of the barony of Forth were an English or Welsh colony, although they are certainly not in Ireland long enough to have given rise to this story, which is, however, of great antiquity; much less can they be supposed to have been here since A. M. 2931, the period assigned by O'Flaherty to this Cruithnian invasion. See the Additional Notes, No. XVIII. Pinkerton and his Irish assistants, not knowing that Tuatha Fídhbha was a proper name, translate this passage thus: "Creamthan Sciathbhel, King of Leinster, told them they should be welcome, provided they would free him of the tribe-widows."—vol. i. p. 507. But his version of this tract is full of similar errors, which it would be waste of time to point out individually.—(T.)

^m Ard-leamnuachta.—The hill or height of new milk. This name, which perhaps gave origin to the fable, is now lost. The description here given of the battle, and of the advice of the Druid Drostan, is very obscure, but it is explained by the more full account of the transaction which will be found in Note XVIII. at the end of the volume, from which some explanatory words have been inserted in the translation, to render it intelligible. For do ponnaδ̄ m caτ̄, L. reads do p̄aδ̄aδ̄ m caτ̄.—(T.)

^r Sreodh.—For the meaning of this word see note on the following poem, line 149, p. 144. Pinkerton's version of this passage is ludicrously absurd: "They were in want of order and distinction; had neither spears (for hunting), nets (for fowling), nor women."—(T.)

^s Last Cruithnian that reigned.—Not true in fact: but the Nomina Regum Pictorum

the milk of seven score white cows should be spilled [in a pit] where the next battle should be fought. This was done, and the battle was fought by them, viz., the battle of Ard-leambnachta^m, in Hy-Keimnelagh. Every one of the Picts whom they wounded used to lie down in the new milk, and the poison of the weapons of the Tuatha Fidhbla did not injure any of them. The Tuatha Fidhbla were then slain. Four of the Cruithnians afterwards died; namely, Drostan, Solenⁿ, Nechtain, and Ulfa. But Gub^o, and his son Cathluan, acquired great power in Eri, until Herimon drove them out, and gave them the wives of the men who had been drowned along with Donn^p, namely, the wife of Bres, the wife of Buas, &c.

XXVIII. Six of them remained as lords over Breagh-mhagh^q. From them are derived every spell, every charm, every sreodh^r, and augury by voices of birds, and every omen. Cathluan was monarch over them all, and he was the first king of them that ruled in Alba. Seventy kings of them ruled over Alba, from Cathluan to Constantine, who was the last Cruithnian that reigned^s. The two sons of Cathluan were Catinolodar and Catinolachan^t; their two champions were Im, son of Pern, and Cind, the father of Cruithne^u; Cras, son of Cirech, was their hero; Uaisneimh was their poet; Cruithne their artificer; Domhnall, son of Ailpin^v, was the first Gadelian king, till he was killed.

(ap. Innes, App. 798), were carried down no further. Five Pictish princes reigned after Constantine during 22 years.—(H.) See what Innes has said on this Irish account of the seventy kings, vol. i. p. 102.—(T.)

at cupaid, and translates in θα cupaid, “in great distress.”—(T.)

^v Ailpin.—Domnall mac Ailpil ip e tarrech po gob go po marb Brietir mna Ipacon, L. There is some sad confusion and omission of words in the text. I have supplied conjecturally in italics in the translation what I suppose to have been the meaning. For Britus, son of Isaac, see above, p. 27.—(T.)

^z Britons of Foirtren.—That is to say, the Gwyddyl Fichti of North Britain, whose kingdom was called by the Irish Fortren Mor. Fodla Fortren was one of the seven fabulous brothers, sons of Cruthne, who divided Albany amongst them. But Foirtren, perhaps, amounts to powerful or mighty. Dr. O'Conor fancifully makes it a contraction of Fortraigh Greine, sunrise, i. e. the east.—Script. R. II. iii. p. 55. It is the name of the whole realm; and has not been ascertained to have been special to any part of it. It was, I scarcely doubt, the Gwyddyl Fichti name as well as the Irish name; for the prefix For, which is the gor of the Welsh, is prevalent in the composition of Pictish names of places.—(H.)

^a By heaven and earth, &c.—This is the ancient Irish oath, by which the various elements and parts of nature were made guarantees of the bargain, and enemies to the forswearer. The oaths exacted from his subjects by Tuathal Teachtmár, and that given to the Lagenians by King Loeghaire mac Neill, are memorable instances of it. At an earlier epoch King Hugony the Great is reported to have secured the crown to his family by the same killed. First, Britus, son of Isacon, possessed Britain. The clan Neimhidh obtained it after Britus, that is after Glun^w. The Cruithnians possessed it after them, after they had come out of Eri. The Gaedhil possessed it after that, that is, the sons of Erc^x, son of Eochaidh.

XXIX. Cruithnechan^y son of Lochit, son of Ingi, went over from the sons of Mileadh to the Britons of Foirtren^z, to fight against the Saxons, and he defended the country of Cruithen-tuath for them, and he himself remained with them [i. e. with the Britons]. But they had no women, for the women of Alba had died. And Cruithnechan went back to the sons of Mileadh, and he swore by heaven and earth^a, and the sun and the moon, by the dew and elements, by the sea and the land, that the regal succession among them for ever should be on the mother's side ; and he took away with him twelve women that were superabundant with the sons of Mileadh, for their husbands had been drowned in the western sea along with Donn ; so that the chiefs of the Cruithnians have been of the men of Eri from that time ever since.

Proleg. ii. p. lxxix. Perhaps, in terming it the oath per res creatas omnes, Mr. O'Flaherty may be employing an important phrase of his own theology, not apparent in that of his Pagan ancestors. The spirit of the adjuration per res omnes has infused itself into the celebrated production, otherwise Christian, called the Feth Fiadha or Lorica

Patricii; apud Petrie on Tara, pp. 57–68, where that incantation is rather indulgently translated, by inserting within brackets such words as tend to remove the invocation, otherwise apparent, of the res creatas omnes.—(H.).

^b The Cruithnians.—This very ancient poem occurs only in L. & B. The text in both is very corrupt, and often unintelligible. B. has been chiefly followed. In line 1, ciō is inserted from L.; in line 3, L. reads belga for belōa.—(T.)

Alban (Alban, undeclined, in Welsh), Albany, is a well-known appellation for that part of Britain which the Picts occupied. See Mr. O'Donovan's Grammar, p. 106. Fable refers it to Albanact, brother of Loerine and Camber; and, like the names of Lloegyr and Cymmyr, it is utterly unknown to ancient historians and geographers. Nay, indeed, the triple division of the island into the Anglo-Roman, Cambro-British, and Scoto-Pictish portions, was a post-Roman circumstance, to which this late nomenclature has adapted itself. The name Braid-Alban, Jugum Albania, Collar of Albany, indicates the elevation of that district; while the highest ridge or summit of the Braid-Alban was styled the Drum-Alban, Dorsum Albania. It is Adamnan's Dorsum Britannia; his mention of it is always as the boundary of Pietland towards the Scots; and crossing the Dorsum Britannia is the conventional phrase for entering the former kingdom from the west. See Adamn. i. 34; ii. 32, 43, 47; iii. 14. Why one of the three parts should thus be termed Britannia, i. e. the whole, may be explained from that part alone having retained an independence, varying in its limits, as the upper or lower wall was maintained. And the Irish abbot of Iona has therein the support of the ancient Welsh, by whom Alban was also termed Prydyn (an old form) though never Prydain. See Taliesin, p. 75, l. 22. Golyddan, p. 156, l. 14, p. 157, ll. 25, 65. Taliesin (or rather some one assuming his person) uses that name triadically, that is, in distinction from Lloegyr and Cymmyr, which makes it the precise equivalent of Alban:

With glorious illustrious might,
From what region did they come?

What cause also moved them 5
From the countries of war?
To traverse the waves^d over the floods,
In what number of ships did they embark?

How were they named before they came 10
To attain their sovereignty?
(They were named from their own^e weapons)—
And what was the name of their country?

Thracia^f was the name of their country, (Until they spread their sails, saying, of the Serpent of Germany, "she shall conquer Lloegyrr and Prydyn, from the shore of the German Ocean to the Severn, and then shall the Brython . . . lose all their land, except wild Wallia."—p. 94. st. 29-31. The improbable statement in Giraldus and the Brut of Kings, that the Humber was the south limit of Alban, arose from the lower, or Picts', wall, passing through Northumberland; as appears from the oldest of the Welsh copies, where it is said that Alban lay "from the river Humber to the penrhyn of Bladon;" for Cape Blatum was the western terminus of the Severian wall, therefore its eastern terminus in Northumbria should have been said for the Humber. Brut, Tysilio, p. 117. Roberts (interpolating the word northwards), p. 33; Giraldi Descript. Cambriae, cap. 7, p. 886.—(II.)

^d The waves.—Lines 7 and 8 are given thus in B.:

Cia um long ar teaggar
Ffri num zono do looar?

In what number of ships did they embark,
And set out to traverse the waves?

one*, a form of the same word, now written pem. See O'Donovan's Irish Grammar, p. 130.—(T.)

^f Thracia.—According to Tzschucke, the Agathyrsi did not inhabit Thrace, but the Bannat of Temeswar, and part of Transylvania. Tzsch. in Pomp. Melam, tom. 6, p. 12. The ancients do, however, impute to the Thracians the use of certain blue punctures, as ornaments of nobility, but not necessary both for the sense and for the metre. This verse is obscure. The words $\kappa\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\iota\kappa\acute{\omicron}\varsigma\ \alpha\upsilon\rho\eta\ \alpha\iota\beta\lambda\eta\varsigma$ will admit of being translated "a city in a pleasant [or beautiful] situation." ^p Pictabis.—Pictabis or Pictavia, Poictiers, is here derived from the Picts, contrary to the prose preface, which had derived it from pikes; unless the word pictis here be taken to mean pikes, and not the name of the people.—(H.)

The hundred deeds of mighty Ercal.

And in the next line the same manuscript has Colchoin for Geleon, which seems a manifest mistake of transcription.—(T.)

ous fathers of the western church. Venantius Fortunatus, one of his successors in that see, writes thus in his eulogy of the pious Queen Radegund, lib. vii. l. 11:

"Fortunatus ego hinc humili prece, voce, saluto,

^w Fea, added from L. Fea signifies “of woods.” This was the host of the Tuath Fiadhbe, or “people of the woods,” men-

^x Poison.—The reading of L. has been followed. B. reads dia fognað a ndemnaçt, and in the next line a n-ðlungnu. See the story, p. 125, above, and in Additional Notes, No. XVIII. In line 71, B. reads opuan for epia, which is given in the text from L., as being probably the more correct reading.—(T.)

but the meaning is the same.—(T.)

Ireland. If, however, we read in n-atao, which may possibly be also the reading of B., the line may be translated "new milk, in the wound." The next line is from L., but B. reads an-uāmaō poptamal, which (if the words be so divided) will signify, "in powerful [or efficacious] bathing."—(T.)

^d Headstrong.—The word cenn-balc is literally thus rendered, but does not involve the idea of perverse obstinacy implied in the English word headstrong: cenn, a head, is often used as a sort of intensitive in composition. It may mean, however, a stout head, i. e. chief or leader. For cenn-balc, L. reads ceebalc, and in the next verse, co zomlaēt a pach nem, which is corrupt.—(T.)

^f Sharp weapons.—ƒaebpach is the reading of L. In B. this line is given thus, Sligpεac pλυαξ̄ pεa pεbaῶ, where pλιγpεac is an evident mistake for pλυα-pεac, and pεa pεbaῶ is probably the name of the hostile tribe Fea Fidhbhe.

 See above, line 72. In line 90 the reading of L. has been followed. B. reads γam επειῶ ip γam τοβαῶ.—(T.)

^ε Their defeat, i. e. the defeat of the Tuath Fidhbhe: oia n-διτη has been adopted from L. for τυαῶ γλιαῶ, which is the reading of B.—(T.)

^η The three plains.—These words seem to denote some place in the County Wexford. Perhaps τρι μαίξε should be taken as a proper name, but it is not now known as such. It occurs in both copies. In L. lines 93 and 94 are transposed, and the stanza is read thus:

Cuprið anð τρι μαίξι na Cpuιzmicð co n-ζαpυ cuméap eazla pæbarp na Ξαειγιλ co n-γλαine.

“On the three plains planted

Cremhthan Sciathbel of horses was protected.

In line 95, B. reads oibil instead of pæbæp, which latter reading has been adopted in the text. The word τριπλιβ in line 94, which is omitted in L., appears to signify sods, soil, lands.—(T.)

ⁱ Died.—co-ngaḃao, L. In line 98 L.
reads bpaethap blaḃach, and in line 99,
B. reads Ulpha instead of Neachtan, which last name has been substituted in the text from L., as being in accordance with the prose, especially as B. immediately after agrees with L. in the account given of Ulfa in the next stanza.—(T.)

^j Rachrann in Bregia.—Rachrann was the ancient name of the rocky island of Lambay, near the Hill of Howth, which is in the territory of Bregia. Lines 103 and 104 are from L. B. reads, in a cāpnn im-ḡreaḡaḃ and po meḃap malarz.

“In his ear in Bregia
Did he meditate malediction.”—(T.)

^k Elevated.—L. reads maḡḃap, “is killed,” which is plainly wrong. In line 106 B. reads bo aepuaḡape ; the reading of L. has been preferred.—(T.)

demy, vol. xviii.)—(T.)

^o And her brother.—lit. "with her brother." The meaning is that the Irish were

As king over them all,

 Each woman and her brother^o.

 By the stars, by the earth,
 That from the nobility of the mother cunning in obtaining conditions from the Picts, before they gave them women.—(T.)

^p Sovereignty.—This distich is very corrupt; for ϩορρο, line 117, B. reads ερρο. The text is corrected from L. Line 120 is also adopted from L., instead of ϩο ϩνα-εωϩ αμμϩε, the reading of B. L. reads οεμνυ in line 118, for πεμνυ. In line 117, παεα signifies not so much oaths as obli-

^q Caitminn.—Caitmō. B.—(T.)

^r Catmolodor.—This name is now Cadwaladyr. He appears to be called “hard-knobbed,” in allusion to the deep scars with which his body was tattooed or ornamented. Lines 125 and 126 are given thus in L.:

βαταρ γίλλι γλορδα

 And Catainlocach the red-knobbed.”

The word clechep signifies the person in a tribe to whom belonged the right of final appeal. In line 127 L. inserts γλαμα before γλορδα.—(T.)

“Cind skilful in their art” [i. e. war]. In the next line the scribe has written .u.n. mc pnpε, “the seven sons of Pirt,” for “Im, son of Pirnn.”—(T.)

⁷ Catlim.—Cηετlem. L. I have taken this word for a proper name; cετ lim might signify, “I acknowledge,” “I allow.”—(T.)

L. In the remainder of this stanza the text of L. has been followed. B. reads:

which must be corrupt, for it violates the metre. Different duties are assigned to Cruithne here, and in the prose account, where he is called α cεapō, their artist or artificer. The places called Athmagh and Athgort, line 140, are unknown.—(T.)

^w Ealga.—B. reads melǾa, which is perhaps a mistake for m EǾa. Elga or Ealga was one of the poetical names of Ireland. Cn tpeap ann (says Keatinge) Inp EalǾa .i. oilen uapal. Oip ap ionann inp Ǿ oilen. Ǿ ap ionann ealǾa Ǿ uapal, Ǿ ap pe lunn Ǿeap m-ǾolǾ Ǿa Ǿnacē an t-annm Ǿm uippe. “The third name (of Ireland) was Inis Ealga, i. e. noble island; for Inis is the same as island, and Ealga is the same as noble; and this was its usual name from the time of the Fir-bolgs.”—(T.)

cupach, the reading of L., has been substituted. The next line is also taken from L. B. reads να πο ceipeaθ ὄpεαγμαc̄, "they would not leave Breghmagh." The Druids are called "demon-like," or "devilish," as being skilled in demoniacal arts.—(T.)

³ Druidism.—The word μᾱιc̄ is so explained in an old glossary in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. The whole stanza is thus given in B.:

Ὅpυιδεc̄hε γ ιολαc̄hε μᾱc̄ μαpe min balc̄ mup glan gl̄ep ο̄ibaθ γα θυαιn γιλ ιp υᾱιθib πο munac̄, which is so corrupt that it is difficult to translate it, and it is also inconsistent with the laws of the metre. The text of L. has been followed, with one correction of υᾱιθib πο in the last line, for υᾱib pib πο.—(T.)

² Sredlus.—B. reads p̄leaγ̄, a word which may signify "spears;" but the reading of L. is preferred, as being in accordance with the prose. See p. 125. As the meaning of the word ppeθ or ppeoθ is doubtful, it has been left untranslated. See the poem attributed to St. Columba, Miscell. Irish Arch. Soc., vol. i. p. 2, and note 31, p. 12, where Mr. O'Donovan conjectured it to be the ancient form of επ̄εαθ, a flock or herd. But he has since found another copy of that poem in a parchment MS. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, Laud. 615, p. 7, where the word is twice written with an aspiration on the θ, thus: "ní háγ̄ ppeoiθ̄ acā mō c̄uiō; and again, να ha-θ̄ep̄ ὀο γο̄θᾱιθ̄ γεp̄γ̄, ná ppeoθ̄, ná p̄en ap̄ b̄c̄ cé;" it is also found written in

MSS. indifferently $\rho\rho\epsilon\delta$ and $\rho\rho\epsilon\zeta$, from which we may infer that the final letter was always intended to be pronounced with aspiration, therefore the word must be $\rho\rho\epsilon\delta$, $\rho\rho\iota\delta$, $\rho\rho\epsilon\zeta$, or $\rho\rho\epsilon\sigma$, a sneezing, a word still in use, which is also frequently written $\rho\rho\sigma\zeta$ or $\rho\rho\sigma\zeta$. It is well known that sneezing, both among the Greeks and Romans, and also in the middle ages, was regarded as ominous, and made use of for the purposes of divination. This superstition was prohibited by several enactments of councils and synods, and formed a frequent topic of reprobation from the pulpit. As an example we may cite the following passage from a sermon preached by St. Eligius or Eloy, who became Bishop of Noyon about the year 640, "Similiter et auguria, vel sternutationes, nolite observare, nec in itinere positi aliquas aviculas cantantes attendatis, sed sive iter, sive quodeunque operis arripitis signate vos in nomine Christi, &c."—Vit. S. Eligii. lib. ii. c. 15, apud Dacherii Spicil. p. 97. See also the "Libellus abbatis Pirminii," published by Mabillon, which he supposes to belong to the year 758: "Noli adorare idola, non ad petras, neque ad arbores, non ad angulos; neque ad fontes, ad trivios nolite adorare, nec vota reddere. Precantatores, et sortilegos, karagios, aruspices, divinos, ariolos, magos, maleficos, sternutus, et auguria per aviculas, vel alia ingenia mala et diabolica nolite facere et credere."—Vet. Anal. p. 69. These examples will suffice to shew the late continuance of this class of superstitions.—See also Grimm's Deutsche Mythologie, p. 647.—(T.)

ιμμα ιαζ κο ορηε
 ι τρη ιαζ ρεαχ ηε.—(T.)

^d He.—The island of Ilay or Ila, one of the five Ebudæ or Hebrides, anciently Epidium, and long the capital seat of the Lordship of the Isles. It lies outside of the Mull of Cantire or Epidian Foreland, to the inside of which lies Boot or Bute. And I suppose that King Bruide the First, whom I have argued (See Addit. Notes, No. XVII.) to be the very first king of Gwyddyl Fiehti in Britain, was called Brudi Bout, from that island. If the first descent was on Ilay, Bute was a snug and likely place to become the royal residence.

This statement is somewhat different from that of Nennius, cap. 5, that the Picts first occupied the Orkneys, “et postea ex affinitimis insulis vastaverunt non modicas et multas regiones, occupaveruntque eas in sinistrali parte Britannia;” though even he admits that they did not occupy the mainland from the Orkneys immediately, but from the other islands. Beda says generally, “habitare per septentrionales insulae partes ceperunt;” and that phrase, which meant no more than Alban or the ultra-mural Britain in general, may possibly have suggested the statement in the Historia Britonum. That they stood over from Cruthenia in as nearly as may be the same course, as in after days their neighbours of the Dalriadha pursued, is the probability, as well as the best authority. When we read that Muredach, son of Angus, was the “primus colonus” of Ilay (Ogygia, p. 470), of course we merely understand that he was the first Dalriadhan settler.

The termini given by this poet exclude the Orkneys, of which the Irish legend seems to say nothing; and, though Nennius in cap. 5 mentions the temporary occupation of them by the Picts, in his first chapter he places them ultra Pictos, which the name of the Pightland Firth doth likewise imply. Yet it is not to be doubted that the Picts did possess those islands before the Norwegians. See Wallace's Orkneys, cap. xi. p. 67, Ed. 1693; Adamnan, ii. cap. 42. The History of the Picts ascribed to H. Maule of Melgund has a legend of Leutha, king of the Picts of Orkney, who subdued and gave his name to the isle of Lewis; p. 29, Ed. Glasg. 1818. The Diploma of Thomas Bishop of Orkney (ap. Orkneyinga Saga, p. 549, 550) avers, upon the authority of ancient records, that the Norwegians found two nations in Orkney, the Peti (Picts) and the Papæ, but entirely destroyed them both. The former is a known Saxon and Norse softening of the name Pict. "Scotiæ ac Petiæ insularumque quas Australes vel Meridianas vocant." Saxo Gramm. Hist. Dan. ix. p. 171, etc. We must adopt the conclusion, that the Papæ were the Irish fathers of the rule of St. Columkille, who repaired to the Orkneys, and obtained possession of Papa Stronsa and Papa Westra, as he had done of Iona; though, perhaps, with this addition, that all the inhabitants of the Papa islands, and not alone the religious, came to be so called. That opinion, I think, is decided by the statement of Ari Froda, that, when Ingulf the Norwegian visited Iceland, he found some Christians there, whom the Northmen call Papæ, who, not choosing to associate with heathens, went away, leaving behind them Irish books, bells, and croziers; and from these things it was easily judged they were Irish. Arius, cap. ii. p. 10, Ed. 1744. If Iceland be the Thule Insula of Dicuil, who wrote his book De Mensurâ Orbis in 825, he had thirty years before conversed with some clerici who had sojourned upon that island from the 1st of February to the 1st of August, and in the summer could see to catch the lice upon their shirts at midnight.—Cap. vii. s. 2, n. 6. This was seventy-nine years anterior to the voyage of Ingulf. Arngrim Jonas observed that the small island of Papey, in East Iceland, was probably a seat of the Irish Papæ, and expressed the like opinion (which Mr. Pinkerton has adopted without acknowledgment) of Papa Stronsa and Papa Westra. Arngr. Island. Primordia, p. 375, Ed. H. Steph. St. Cormac the Navigator, called O'Liathain, whose daring coracle visited the Orkneys under letters of safe conduct obtained for him by Columbkille from Bruide, king of Piets, sailed about with the express object of finding for himself an eremus (hermitage) in oceano. Adamnan, i. cap. 6, ii., cap. 42. Thus it was that the kings and toparchs of the Peti received the Papæ into the smaller isles. The same Dicuil mentions some little islands, to be reached in two days and the intervening night, in a boat of two benches, from septentrionalibus Britannie insulis (Orkneys?), and which I take to be the Feroes, in quibus in centum fermè annis (from 825, making 725) eremitæ ex nostrâ Scottiâ navigantes habitaverunt; but the latrones Nortmanni had driven them away, and the islets were vacuæ anachoretis, but full of sheep and wild fowl.—Ibid. s. 3.—(H.) The word ζριβε, line 158, has been supposed to signify swiftness. In the Leabhar Gabhala of the OClerys, p. 96, in an historical poem by Eochaidh O'Flynn, we find an αρθ abαρ n-ιμζριυ, where the Gloss is 1αρ αν uαρλ τιξερνα αρθ βα comluar m-deabaid no m ιορζαυ, i. e. "the noble lord who was all swiftness in battles and conflicts." And in the ancient metrical Glossary called "Poetry is the Sister of Wisdom," ζριυ is explained ανm δο λυαρ, "a name for swiftness."—(T.)

^f Cat.—The region of Cat is the country now called Cathanesia, or Caithness. Its derivation from Caith or Cat, one of Cruthne's seven sons, is a patronymical fable. Whether derived from the wild cat, like the Clan Chattan, whose territory included Caithness (see Scott's Maid of Perth, iii. chap. 4), or from cath, war, battle, the sound of it seems to recur in the names Cathluan, Catnolodar, Catnolachan. That province may have owed celebrity to its position as a northern terminus; as Nennius says, “a Totenes usque ad Catenes.”

The Tractatus de Situ Albaniae (composed by an Englishman, at least not by a Scot, soon after 1185, and printed by Innes, ii., 768–72, with a suspicion that Giraldus was its author), divides Albania into the seven portions of seven brothers, of which the seventh was “Cathanesia citra montem et ultra montem, quia mons Mound dividit Cathanesiam per medium.” The Mons Mound was Mount Ord, and the Cathanesia eis montem was the Sudurland (southern land) of the Northmen. “Of old, Sutherland was called Cattee, and its inhabitants Catteigh, and so likewise was Caithness and Strathnaver; and, in the Irish, Sutherland to this day is called Catey, and its inhabitants Catigh; adeo ut Catteeness nihil aliud sit quam promontorium Cattæ seu Sutherlandiæ, quod promontorium a latere orientali montis Ordi prætenditur.”—Blaew cit. in Brand’s Orkney, cap. xi. As Caithness lies not at all north, but fairly east, of Sutherland in its enlarged sense (for Dunnet Head in Caithness is only 58° 35′; and Cape Wrath is 58° 34′), it is evident that the Sudurland of the North-

men was only the portion properly so called, and that they did not include therein the Strathnaver. But as they divided those parts into the jarldom of Katanes and the Sudurland, we should, I think, infer that Strathnaver was included in the jarldom; while the Sudurland, though infested, and perhaps partly inhabited, by Northmen, was not thus feudally detached from the crown of the Scoto-Piets. Sir Walter Scott mentions, that the territory of the Clann Chattan comprehended Sutherland and Caithness [Cathanesiam citra et ultra], and that the Earl of Sutherlandshire was their paramount chief, with the title of Mohr Ar Chat; and, though he includes Inverness, and even Perth, within the limits of that clan or league of clans, as referrible to the fifteenth century, we may safely esteem that the Chattanaich originally denoted the people of Katanes within and without Ord.—(II.)

^g Forcu.—Of the place here called Forcu I can give no account. It must have been on the southern extremity of Fortren Mor. FOR is the favourite Pietish prefix, as in Fortren, their kingdom, Forteviot, their palace, Fordun, Forfar, Forres, &c. Pos-

or ael may signify sharp weapons. But B. has in for co, in line 172.—(T.)

^j Many an Amlaff.—Amlaff, Amlaib, Amlaib, &c., for Olaf, was the prominent name among those northern vikings, who ravaged, and in part conquered, Ireland and Pictland, during the ninth and tenth centuries. See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 290, and the Editor's note. In 852(3) Amlaip, king of Lochlin, came into Ireland and exacted tribute there.—Ann. Ult. In the spring of 866 he ravaged Pictland. Three years later he was slain by Constantine, king of Picts.—Ann. Ult. and Chron. Pict. Among the Danes of Northumbria and Lothian the name of Anlaf was popular, and one of their Anlafs fought on the Scottish side at Brunenburg in 937.—Chalmers' Caled. i. 337, 338. Amlaib M^c Illuib, son of Indulf (so Dr. O'Connor), king of Albany, was slain by Kenneth, son of Malcolm [son of Domhnall, ap. Ann. Ult., but erroneously], in 976 or 977.—Tig. et Ann. Ult. in annis. It would seem as if king Indulfus had married some viking's daughter, to have an Amlaff for his son. The year 979 saw the death of the son of Amlaff the younger, grandson of Amlaff the elder, at the battle of Temora. And in 980 Amlaibh M^c Sitriuc, last Danish king of Dublin, retired to Iona. It is evident that this popular name had come to be expressive of the nation who used it, as those of John, Patrick, and David have connected themselves with three sections of our island empire; with this further resemblance to the two latter, that Olaf son of Tryggvi, and St. Olaf, were the apostles of religion in Norway.

The main error of our bard, if the reading in the text be correct, would consist in the supposition that an intermixture of Northmen with Scots and Picts existed from the beginning; and that "many an Amlaff" had combined with the Cruthnich in their first occupation of Albany. If, however, we were at liberty to make a transposition of two lines, we might thereby restore the truth of history to our bard. That they "seized on Alba, with many an Amlaff, till Kenneth Mac Alpin," would be enormous error; but that they did so "till Kenneth Mac Alpin with many an Amlaff," is the truth. For it was in his (the first Scoto-Pictish) reign, that Danari (the Danes under Amlaiv) vastaverunt Pictaviam for the first time.—Chron. Pict. in num. 77.—(II.)

Perhaps the word amlæb in the text (if that be the original reading) may not be a proper name, but may be used in the sense of a champion, a hero, from which the proper name is derived; but for this we have no authority, and it is, therefore, more probable, that the bard had no idea of speaking of "Amlaffs" at all, and that in line 171 there are mistakes of the scribe. We should read perhaps α νομαο ml æb, i. e. "with their many arts" or sciences. Æb is explained εατῶα, arts or sciences, in old glossaries, and ml may easily be confounded with ml. But as this is only conjecture, no alteration has been made in the text.—(T.)

^k Cinaeth mac Alpin.—Kenneth Mac Alpin was king of Scots, or of the British Dalriada, called Airer-Gaedhal, i. e. territory of the Gael; which name of Gael, Gaithel, or Gaedhael was then synonymous to that of Scots. The country bearing the national appellation of Argyle included, besides the modern Argyle proper, the territory of Loarn or Lorn, and those of Knapdale, Cowel, and Cantire; being bounded to the east by Mount Drum-Alban, Adamnan's Dorsum Britanniae, and southward by the Firth of Clyde. In 843 he wrested the kingdom of Albany out of the hands of its last native ruler, Bruide the Seventh, and the Scots and Picts were never again disunited. This is the usual epoch of the conquest; although three princes of the Pietish line, Kenneth, Bruide, and Drustan, kept up a struggle against the son of Alpin till 846.—(II.)

scarring; alluding to the tattooing practised among the Picts; but it will be difficult to make the remainder of the stanza square with this. The translation adopted is, therefore, more probably the intended meaning, especially as the word κρεάαῶ appears to be used in the same signification in line 177; and see line 182.—(T.)

^m Fifty kings.—That is to say, inclusive. For Macbeth, king of Scots and Picts, is the fiftieth in the enumeration of the Scots kings from Loarn Mac Ere, in the Duan Albanach, a contemporary poem; and apud Ogygia, p. 488, and the Tables in Pinkerton, ii. p. 352, 353. In the list of the same, ap. Innes App. p. 767, he is only the fortieth. But without counting the three competitors from 843 to 848, he was numbered ninety-second in the

ⁿ Eochaidh.—This was Eochaidh Muinreamhair, father of Ere and grandfather of Loarn and Fergus; himself the third in descent from Cairbre Riada, and the fourth from Conary II., king of Erin, whom the princes of the Dal Riada affected for the founder of their race, the “Clanna Chonaire.” Duan, ver. 27.—(II.)

^o Mac Brethach, or perhaps we should read Mac Bethach. See Additional Notes, No. XIX. This stanza and the next occur only in the Book of Ballymote. If they are a portion of the original poem the writer must have lived after A. D. 1040, in which year Macbeth began his reign.—(T.)

The sixty-six kings mentioned in the next stanza are evidently the kings of the old Cruithnian race, beginning with Cruithne Mac Cinge, and ending with Drusken Mac Feredach, according to Fordun's list, which contains exactly sixty-six kings, including Kenneth Mac Alpin, by whom Drusken was overthrown, and in whose person the Fergusian and Pictish monarchies were united.—(T.) Of these kings thirty-three are Pagan and thirty-three Christian; a circumstance which looks like contrivance. And we may add that sixty-six (like 309, the number of the original Agathyrsi, see p. 133, line 40), is the bardic expression of 12.—(II.)

in i. cap. 35, he says, "Clementis unius him to have understood kyune, kin, or kind, in the modern sense of the adjective kind, i. e. benevolent, a sense which has escaped Dr. Jamieson's lexicographical researches.—(H.)

same may be said of almost every scrap of Latin which he had occasion to transcribe; his attempts at Latin are here given, however, exactly as they stand in the original MS., although they have been, of course, corrected in the translation.—(T.)

¹ Circing.—In B. these names are given thus: Fib, Fidach, Fonla, Fortream, Cathach, Cait Ce, Cirig. The insertion of Cathach renders it necessary either to make Caitce one name, not two separate names, as the above list, and some other transcribers (no doubt rightly) have done, or else to make Fodla-Fortrean, (i. e. Fodla of Fortren) one name, although in the above list they are given as two, for Foltlaid is the same as Foltlaig and Fodla. Cathach is omitted in L¹. in the list of the sons of Cruithne given above, p. 51, and also in the Chronicon Pictorum, Innes, vol. ii. p. 773, App. No. ii., and Pinkerton, vol. i. App. Nos. x. xi. But his name occurs in the verses attributed to Columkille, which immediately follow in this place in B., and are the same as those given above, p. 51, where ce zuch was understood to signify an hundred. The verses might be rendered, or else,

Cait, Ce, Cireach, Cetach of children [i. e. the fruitful], Fib, Fidach, Fodla of Fortrenn.

Fib, Fidach, Fodla, Fortren.

These seven fabulous brothers are symbolical of seven real territorial divisions. See above, p. 51.—(T.)

^a Gartnait.—M. Van Praet's attested copy of the Chronicon Pictorum, published by Pinkerton, gives this passage thus:

"gartnait hoc a quo gartnait .iiii.
regna. vere ix. ā. rēz."

Which Mr. Pinkerton interprets thus:

"29. Gartnait hoc, a quo Gartnait, .iiii. regna.
30. Vere ix. an. reg."

Thus making vere the name of a king. Innes reads Gartnait hoc, and likewise makes Vere the thirtieth king. But are not the words "vere ix. an. reg." an evident correction of "iiii. regnavit," intimating that the real length of Gartnait hoc's reign was nine, not four years? The Irish transcriber evidently intended to adopt this correction, but in doing so retained the .iiii., expunging the other words. Fordun (iv. c. 11) has "Garnathbolger annis ix." The reign of Canatulacma appears to be fixed at three, but may be four years, as in the Chron. Pictorum, for m. and m. are easily confounded, and in this case it is not quite certain which was intended by the scribe. Uradach-vetla is assigned two years, which agrees with Innes, but differs from M. Van Praet's copy, in Pinkerton, which has iv.—(T.)

^b Gartnait-duipeir.—Fordun has Garnard Dives, from which we may presume that duipeir signified rich. Perhaps the d is an expletive derived from the final t or d of Garnard or Garnait, and if so, uipéir is not far from the Irish ṛuáðip, rich (the initial ṛ aspirated), which is pronounced very nearly as uiphír.—(T.)

^c Gained.—The Latin has “c. bella peregit:” po geim signifies properly, wounded, killed, and hence, won, gained, when applied to battles.—(T.)

^d Mor-breac, for Morbet [as in Pict. Chron.] bene. The statements which follow are false and out of chronology. Pictland and Abernethy were not then Christian, nor was St. Bridget yet born, nor was Darluchdach yet abbess of Kildare. Very long after the death of both these ladies, and about 608, Nectan II. founded the church of Abernethy.—Register of St. Andr. cit. Pink. i. 296; ii. 267.—(II.)

St. Darluchdach was the immediate successor of St. Bridget, as abbess of Kildare, and died on the anniversary of St. Bridget's death, having survived her but one year. Colgan. Vit. S. Darlugdachæ ad 1 Feb. There are different dates assigned for St. Bridget's death, varying from 510 to 548. Colgan has decided in favour of the year 523.—Trias. Th. p. 619. Fordun (iv. c. 11) gives the series after Garnaitduiper thus: Hurgust, son of Fergus, twenty-seven years; Thalargen, son of Keother, twenty-five. tino missus est ad Scotos docendos, longe tamen ante in Christo credentes.” Then follow Talargar, son of Amyle, two years; Nectane Thaltamoth, ten years. In the next chapter he ascribes the foundation of Abernethy to St. Bridget and her seven virgins, but places it in the reign of Garnard Makdompnach, the successor of the Bruide in whose time St. Columba preached to the Picts; which is of course more probable. Pinkerton and Innes are both mistaken in their reading of the Chron. Pict. in this passage, which is not “abbatissa cillæ Darada, Hibernia exulat proxime ad Britanniam,” but “abbatissa Cille-dara de Hibernia exulat pro Christo ad Britanniam,” as may be seen by their own edition of M. Van Praet’s attested copy. What the contracted word f̄ri stands for in the text I do not know.

The Chron. Pict. reads “secundo.”—(T.)

^e Two Drests.—If I am right in considering Ɔaōp̄er̄t̄ [read Ɔaōp̄er̄t̄] as two words, and translating “two Drests,” the Irish version has enabled us to correct a mistake which Innes and Pinkerton have both committed in their interpretation of this passage of the Chron. Pictorum, which stands thus in M. Van Praet’s attested copy:

dadrest .i. drest fili⁹
gyrom .i. drest fili⁹ wdrost .v.
aū gregū. drest fili⁹ girom sol⁹.
v. aū reḡ.

From this Innes and Pinkerton have given us three kings, viz.: 1. Dadrest, who anno regni ejus Darlugdach, abbatissa Cille-Dara de Hibernia exultat pro Christo ad Britiniam; [secundo?] anno adventus sui immolavit Nectonius anno uno Apurnighe Deo et sanctæ Brigidæ, præsentem Darlugdach, quæ cantavit alleluia super istam [hostiam].

Dartguitimoth xxx. annis regnavit.

Galamarbith xv. annis regnavit.

Two Drests^e, i. e. Drest, fil. Budros, xv. annis regnaverunt communiter. Drest, fil. Girom, solus v. annis regnavit.

Galum-cenamlaeph iii. annis regnavit.

Gartnait, fil. Girom, vii. annis regnavit.

Cailtaine, fil. Girom, anno regnavit.

Talorg, fil. Murtolic, xi. annis regnavit.

Drest, fil. Manaith, uno anno regnavit. Cum Brideno^f i. anno.

Bruide Mac Maelcon xxx. annis regnavit. In octavo^g anno regni ejus baptizatus est a sancto Columba.

Gartnait,

reigned one year; 2. Drest, son of Girom, and 3. Drest, son of Udrost. Drest, son of Girom, they make to have reigned one year alone, five years jointly with Drest, son of Udrost, and then five years alone. I have very little doubt, however, that Dadrest, should be read Da Drest, which words signify Duo Drest. If this conjecture be correct it will prove that the Chron. Pictorum was translated from a Gaelic original, more ancient than our present Irish transcript, which appears from the mistakes with which it abounds, to have been taken from a Latin copy. I would propose to read the passage thus: "Duo Drest, i. e. Drest filius Girom et [for the .i. here either signifies "i. e." or is a mistake for et] Drest filius Wdrost

v. annos coregnaverunt. Drest filius Girom solus v. annos regnavit." Thus the Irish and Latin will agree, except in the length of the joint reign, which the Irish transcriber makes to be fifteen years. It is some confirmation of the emendation here proposed, that of the five lists of Pictish kings quoted by Pinkerton, vol. i. p. 242, and tables at the end of vol. i., Dadrest appears only on the authority of the Chron. Pictorum, as he and Innes have understood it. The contraction $\text{u}\text{c}\text{u}\text{c}$ is probably intended for "communiter."—(T.)

^f Cum Brideno.—Galumcenamlaeph in the Chron. Pictorum is placed after Drest, son of Munait, and the words "cum Brideno i. anno," apply to him.—(T.)

^g In octavo.—The transcriber has here made sad work, but the text is printed without correction. He mistook in for m, and by confounding the uo of octauo with the no of anno, he has produced the compound Moctauuuo anno, which the Chron. Pictorum enables us to decipher.—(T.)

^h Tolorc.—The Chron. Pictorum inserts “Breidei fil. Wid v. an. reg.” between

Gartnait mac Uiuō or Wid, and this Tolorc; and that the omission was a mistake of the Irish transcriber is evident from the word eorum.—(T.)

the text is an evident mistake for $\alpha\mu\iota$; $\alpha\mu\iota\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha$ is of course a blunder for $\alpha\mu\iota\alpha\alpha\alpha\alpha$.—(T.)

^l Talorcan.—This king is omitted in the Chron. Pictorum, but he is given by Fordun. The Irish text is corrected from Lynch's copy, Cambrensis Eversus, p. 94. The scribe omitted u before uel, and wrote .u.oeꝑ for xv.—(T.)

^m Canul.—This king is called fil. Tarla in the Chron. Pict. The name of his father is given above $\overline{\text{Can}}\overline{\text{g}}$, with a mark of contraction, which has been retained, as I know not how to write the word in full. It may be Tangar or Tangad. Lynch gives it "Canul fil. Tang," without noticing the contraction.—Cambr. Eversus, ib.—(T.)

^o Constantin, fil. Aedh.—The list given by Lynch (Cambrensis Evers, p. 94) omits the three kings between this Constantin and Domhnall fitz Alpin, which is probably a mistake of his transcript, or of the press. The Chron. Pictorum gives Eochodius filius Ku, as the successor of Aedh fil. Cinaed, instead of Girig mac Dungaile; but adds “Licet Ciricium fil. ⁵ Britania.—This scrap of Latin, strangely perverted by the ignorance of the scribe, is taken from the opening sentence of Bede's history: noctat I suppose to be an ignorant corruption of the contraction nō. epat, and I have rendered it accordingly. Bede's words are: "Brittani oceanī insula, cui quondam Albion nomen fuit, &c. . . . quæ per millia passuum octingenta in boream longa, latitudinis habet millia ducenta, exceptis dumtaxat prolixioribus diversorum promonteriorum tractibus, quibus efficitur ut circuitus ejus quadragies octies septuaginta quinque millia compleat." See above, sect. ii. p. 27, where the same statement nearly occurs.—(T)

^v The tribune.—The word επιβῖπ̄r is evidently for επιβῖρ, i. e. επιβουρ. See Bede Hist. lib. i. c. 2. "Cæsaris equitatu primo congressu a Britannis victus, ibique Labienus occisus est."—(T)

^w Claud's Ceissir, i. e. Claudius Cæsar. He is called fourth king or emperor after Julius, evidently from Bede's words: "Claudius imperator, ab Augusto quartus."—c. 3. See above, p. 63. In the MS.

XXXIII. Britinia^s insola, oceani cui quondam Olbiian nomen erat, is eight hundred thousand paces in length, two hundred thousand in breadth, and in circumference five thousand seventy and eight times forty^t. There are in it eight score cities, and five languages, viz. the Saxon language, and the British language, and the Cruithnian language, and Gaelic, and Latin.

the words "Ab incarnatione Domini, clvi." are joined to the preceding paragraph, as if they were the date of the invasion by Claudius; but they are the words with which Bede's fourth chapter begins, and evidently belong to the reign of Marcus Antoninus. This correction has, therefore, been made in the text.—(T)

^x*Antonus*.—Read Antoninus. Bede used no word equivalent to devastated. Cpeidom is explained in the Leabhar Gabhala, p. 37, to signify the breaking down or demolition of ancient boundaries or fastnesses.—(T)

²*Domini*.—The words յար n-lul are here an evident blunder, and are therefore omitted in the translation. The date, as before, is joined in the MS. to the preceding paragraph. Bede is the authority, c. 6; and see above, p. 65.—(T.)

³*Alban*.—Bede, ubi supr. c. 7. The City Legionum is supposed to be Caerleon, the ancient Isca Silurum, on the river Usk, in Monmouthshire. Aaron and Julius are here called chiefs (աբօճնօճ) of the city, although Bede calls them simply “cives.” The word arclinnach

or Erenach, in later times, was applied almost always to an ecclesiastical officer, although not always one in holy orders; but, as appears from this passage, it properly signified any chief, superior, or person in authority. In the Leabhar Breac (fol. iii. col. 1), SS. Peter and Paul are called the arclinnachs or chiefs of the Apostles: րիաճ քիմ օրիշննաճնա n-արտաճ, .i. քարաճ 7 քօլ. And again, quoting Eccl. x. 16, “Væ tibi terra cuius rex puer est, et cuius principes mane comedunt,” &c. the writer adds: Իք քօճում մալարա

it was for him was made the Saxon ditch; he died at Caer Abrog. He had two sons, Basianus and Geta. It was he (the former) that succeeded to the kingdom by the name of Anton.

Ab incarnatione Domini^z cclxxxiii. Dioclistan, the thirty-third king after Juil, and Maximin, came into the island of Britain. It was in their time that Carausius held the sovereignty of Britain seven years, until Alectus killed him, and held the sovereignty himself for three years, until Asclipidotus killed him, and became king himself for ten years. Dioclistan, in the east of the world, was persecuting the Christians, and Maiscimen in the west.

It was in that persecution over the world that Saint Albain^a—and Aron, and Juil, chiefs of the city Leigionum at that time,—died.

Constanst^b, king of Britain, was the father of Constantine, son of Eiline (Helena), the concubine of Constantin. Etrobus wrote that it was in the island of Britain that Constantin took sovereignty at first; for his father had exercised dominion over France and Spain in the life-time of Dioclistan.

Ab incarnatione cclxxvi.^c Gradianus was the fortieth king from Juil. It was in his time that a certain Maxim took the sovereignty of Britain.

On comparing it with Bede, ib. c. 11, it will be seen that the transcriber has given the date ccccvi. instead of ccccvii.; that he has omitted the name Honorius; and has converted Bede's "loco ab Augusto quadragesimo quarto" into forty-four years; the word pegrin is unintelligible, and no attempt has been made to translate it. Nor has any attempt been made to translate what is said about Constantine, which is rendered unintelligible by the gross ignorance of the transcriber; no sense can be made of it without extensive conjectural emendations. It is evidently intended to represent the following statement of Bede, "Hujus [scil. Gratiani] loco Constantinus ex infima militia, propter solam spem nominis, sine merito virtutis, eligitur."—(T.)

Forty-four years^e two years before Eolair [Alaric], King of the Gaeth [Goths], Gradian the champion is made king of the Britons ; and then Constantine, afterwards until Constantinus Comes killed him at the command of Honorius. Constans, his son, came from being a monk, and took the kingdom.

Now Rome^f was destroyed afterwards in the thousandth one hundredth and lxiv.th year from its foundation. That was the end of the Roman dominion over the island of Britain, after cccclxx. years from the time when Juil took the island of Britain. The Romans extinguished it as to its military power, and there were left in it no warriors nor men of learning, and the Romans carried them off, and would not suffer them to return.

It was then that the Gaedhels and the Cruithnians, two border tribes, took captives and spoil.

There went ambassadors from the Britons with presents^g along with them, to the Romans, to seek relief; and there came to them a valiant army across the island, who attacked the Cruithnians and Gaedhels;

Gaedhels; and they returned to their home then. Immediately the enemy came, and mowed down^h the Britons like a ripe corn field.

The ambassadors were sent again, and a legion came to the assistance of the Britons, and fought against the enemies of the Britons, and the ditch which the second Severus made was repaired by them; it was of stonesⁱ this time, i. e. seven feet broad and twelve high from sea to sea; of sods they found it, and they fortified it so that they might not be required to come again to assist them; and they departed.

When the Gaedhels and the Cruithnians heard this they came upon them (i. e. upon the Britons) as wolves^k upon sheep.

The above abstract of Bede is of no historical or literary value, and would be unworthy of publication except as it forms one of the interpolations introduced into the Irish version of the Historia, in the manuscript from which the text of this work has been principally taken. The many ignorant blunders made by the scribe in this portion of his work, prove that the persons employed in making these transcripts were often possessed of no literary qualifications for such a task, except the art of penmanship.—(T.)

^a The miracles of Cairnech.—This legend is probably subsequent to A. D. 1092, when the primacy of the see of Lyons was decreed; perhaps also to the synod of Cashel in 1172, which established canons of affinity; since its author accounts it a sin in Muirchertach to marry the widow of his maternal aunt's son. Though possibly the sin of David, killing and then marrying, may be what he complains of.—(II.)

^b After this.—This legend occurs only in the Book of Ballymote, where it is inserted between what I have numbered sections xiv. and xv., suprà p. 75, i. e. immediately after the account of the complete subjection of the Britons to the Romans. The words "after this," however, must imply some considerable time after the Romans had abandoned Britain; for if Sarran had dominion, as the story goes on to say, over the Saxons as well as over the Picts, his reign must have been subsequent to the Saxon invasion, which is dated A. D. 449: and some time subsequent, for his father-in-law, Loarn, king of Scotland, began his reign A. D. 503. Ogygia, p. 471. The genealogy of Sarran or Saran, the father of St. Carnech, is thus given by Colgan from the genealogy of the saints in the Book of Lecan: Saran, son of Colgan (or Colchuo), son of Tuathal, son of Fedhlim, son of Fiachra Cassan, son of Colla-da-Crioch. Acta SS. p. 783, n. 1, and see also p. 713, c. 4. In another authority quoted ib. n. 2, Fedhlim is made the son of Fechim, son of Fiach, son of Colla-da-Crioch; but the first is more correct; and as Colla-da-Crioch flourished from the year 297 to

OF THE MIRACLES OF CAIRNECH^a HERE.

SARRAN assumed the sovereignty of Britain after this^b, and established his power over the Saxons and Cruithnians. And he took to wife the daughter of the king of Alban, viz., Babona^c, daughter of Loarn, son of Ere^d. And it was not she that was married^e to him, but her sister, viz., Ere, daughter of Loarn, until she eloped with Muiredhach, son of Eoghan, son of Niall, to Eri, and she bore him four about 350, according to O'Flaherty's Chronology, we may reasonably suppose Saran to have reigned about the year 500, or somewhat later.—(T.)

^c Babona.—Pompa or Babona, daughter of Loarn Mor Mac Ere, first king of Scots in Lorn called after him, circa A. D. 503. Ogygia, p. 471. Colgan, Acta SS. xxviii. Martii, p. 782. She bore to Sarran three sons: St. Carnech, St. Ronan, and St. Breacan or Becan (ibid.), of which names the first only occurs in the following list. This Sarran was son of Coelchu, and fifth in descent from Fiachra Cassan, nephew to Colla Huas, 130th king of Erin; and was one of the chiefs of Orgiellia or Oriel in Ulster. Ogygia, ibid. and p. 359, 363.—(H.)

^d Ere, or Ercus, as O'Flaherty and Colgan call him for distinction's sake; for Ere occurs in this story as the name both of a man and of a woman.—(T.)

^e Not . . . married.—This contradiction may perhaps be explained by reference to the irregularities prevalent in a much later age of Irish Christianity. So late as the time of Malachi of Armagh, contractum conjugiorum aut ignorabant aut negligebant. Bernardi Vita Mal. in tom. iv. p. 128, Mabillon. But, under his correction, "concubinatus honestat celebratas nuptiarum," p. 130. The meaning of this is, probably, well explained by Dr. Lanigan as of the system of betrothals or sponsalia de futuro, not followed up by the contractus conjugii, or actual marriage de presenti: Irish Ecel. Hist. iv. pp. 64, 70-72. In the very rude age of Sarran and Babona, we may understand how the latter was taken to wife, but not married, although the mother of three or four sons.—(II.)

† Four sons.—Ere, daughter of Loarn Mac Ere, was married to Muredach, son of Eoghan mac Niall Naoighiallach, and bore him four sons, Muirchertach, king of Erin; Feradhach, Tighernach, and Maon. And after Muredach's death she was remarried to Fergus, son of Conall Gulban, another grandson of Niall the Great, to whom she bore four other sons, Sedna (progenitor of the Gulbanian kings of Erin), Fedhlim (father of St. Columkille), Brendan, and Loarn. Ogygia and Colgan, ubi supra.—(II.) See Additional Notes, No. XXII.

‡ Five sons.—Only four are here mentioned. In the Naemh Seanchus, or Genealogies of the Saints, preserved in the Book of Lecan, (in the tract which Colgan attributes to Aengus the Culdee, and frequently quotes, under the title of “Libellus de matribus Sanctorum,”) only three sons of Babona and Sarran are mentioned;

perhaps because three only were saints: Pompa ingen Loarn maḡair Charraig, ἡ ὀρεκαμ, μεικ Σαραν, ἡ Ροκαν ρινὸς μεκ Σαραν. “Pompa, daughter of Loarn, was the mother of Cairnech and Breacan, sons of Saran, and of Ronan Finn, son of Saran.”—(I.) Saint Cairnech was the son of Saran and Pompa, or Babona. But of the other three the case is less plain. St. Dallan, according to Colgan, was the son of Colla (son of Ere, of the line of Colla Huais, king of Erin), by a mother named Forgail, A. SS. Jan. xxix. p. 203. His real name was Eochaidh, and he was surnamed Dallan, by reason of his blindness. He was lineally descended from Colla Huais, and was cousin-german to St. Maidoc of Ferns, their fathers, Colla Mac Ere and Sedna Mac Ere, being brothers. See Ogygia, iii. c. 76. Of Caemlach I cannot say anything. But the word Luirig, if it were a name at all, would seem only to be a surname, for it is the Latin word lorica. Armour was not early worn in Ireland. At the battle of Seghais, in Leinster, Tighernach, ann. 709, the Britons four sons^f, viz. Muirheartach Mac Erca, and Fearadhach, and Tigh-earnach, and Maian.

And Sarran had issue by Babona; and there were begotten by them five sons^g, viz., Luirig, and Cairnech, and Bishop Dallain, and Caemlach; and he [i. e. Sarran] died after victory and after triumph in the house of Martin^h.

Luirig then succeeded to the throne, and he extended his power over the Saxons, and he forcibly built a fort within the precincts of the monastery of Cairnech his brother. Muirheartach Mac Ercaⁱ happened who served on Ceallach's side were remarked for wearing the luirig. But it may be that the appellation is rather obtained by changing the orthography of a real name than in the way of a surname. See below, p. 190, note.—(H.) Lurach occurs as a proper name in Irish history; but who the Luirig was who is described in the legend before us as a British or Cornish king, I do not know.—(T.)

^h Martin.—The house of Martin is Tours in France, which city he appears to have conquered, and bestowed the bishopric on his son, Cairnech. But neither of those facts appears otherwise than by implication.—(H.) Unless we suppose Tech-Martain to be the name of some place where there was a monastery dedicated to St. Martin; if so, Sarran dying with victory and triumph may signify that he died a monk. There are two places called St. Martin's in Cornwall. But at that time, a little before the Benedictines, all Irish monks were of the Martinist foundation, and every monas-

ⁱ Muirheartach Mac Erca.—This monarch, called Mac Erca, from the name of his mother, Ere, daughter of Loarn, was king of Ireland from 509, according to Tighernach, but, according to the more probable chronology of the Annals of Ulster, from 513 to 534. The account here given of him is not very consistent with his reputation as the first Christian king of Ireland, “a good and pious sovereign.” Lanigan, i. p. 435. We may, perhaps, suppose that the murders for which he was banished from Ireland in his youth, and the subsequent parricide of his grandfather, for which he was banished from Scotland, were committed before his conversion to Christianity. But the same excuse cannot be made for other immoralities attributed to him. See Petrie's Essay on Tara Hill, Transactions Royal Irish Academy, vol. xviii. Antiq. p. 118, sq. The whole of this strange legend gives a curious picture of the loose notions of morality entertained by its author. It is not merely that Sarran is represented as marrying one sister and living with another; that St. Cairnech is represented as born in incest, and Muircheartach in adultery, for these things may have happened in a state of heathenism without reproach to the hero of the story; but St. Cairnech, a Christian bishop, is represented as instigating Muircheartach to the murder of Luirig; and exulting over the death of his brother in language very inconsistent with a profession of the Gospel; and all this without any apparent consciousness in the writer of the legend that he was attributing to his hero anything unbecoming the Christian character.—(I.)

^j Crossans.—These were the cross-bearers in religious processions, who also combined with that occupation, the profession, if we may so call it, of singing satirical poems against those who had incurred Church censure, or were for any other cause obnoxious. In this latter capacity they often brought upon themselves the vengeance of the lawless chieftains whom they lampooned.—(I.)

^k Judge.—The word Δεδροτ is explained in the Leabhar Breac, fol. 14, a., by the

happened to be at that time with the king of Britain, learning military science, after he was expelled from Ireland for having killed the Crossans^j, and after having been subsequently expelled from Alba, for having killed his grandfather, Loarn, king of Alba. It happened that he was at that time getting his arms consecrated by Cairnech, the son of his mother's sister; then Cairnech said to him, Thou shalt be king of Eri and of Britain for ever, and shalt go to heaven after, provided thou canst but prevent Luirig from exercising his power against the Church. Then Mac Erca went to the king, and after he came he told his message, viz.: Build not thy city (said he) in the precincts of Cairnech the bishop. As God is my judge^k, says Luirig, I think more of the power of the pet wild fawn he has, than of his own power, or of the power of the Lord God whom he adores. Mac Erca returned to Cairnech, and told him the result^l. Great wrath suddenly seized Cairnech, et dixit, My prayer to my Lord, to my God, is, that that very fawn may be the cause of his death, and by thy hand, O Mac Erca! Cairnech then commanded Mac Erca to go forth and destroy his brother, and he [Mac Erca] immediately took upon himself to fight him; and he went forth at the command of Cairnech to destroy the king. And God worked a great miracle there for Cairnech, viz. he sent a wild fawn^m out of the mountain into the king's assembly, and paraphrase $\sigma\alpha\rho\ \mu\omicron\ \Theta\epsilon\alpha\ \mu\beta\rho\alpha\zeta\alpha$, i. e. "by my God of judgment." The meaning is: "I would as soon attribute miraculous powers to the pet fawn that follows him as to Cairnech himself, or the God he worships." The word Combe, here translated "Lord God," is the title generally given to Christ.—(T.)

^l The result.—Literally his desire, i. e. what he had desired to be done in regard to Luirig.—(T.)

^m A wild fawn.—Meaning of course the wild fawn already spoken of, for otherwise the prayer of St. Cairnech would not have been fulfilled. Fawns and deer occupy a prominent place in Irish hagiography, and were the subjects of many miracles. St. Berach, of Cluain Coirphthe, had a deer which was sent to him miraculously to carry his luggage, when he and the host all went in pursuit of it except the king himself and his women. Et dixit Mac Erca, If you had been just, my Lord, towards your cleric, it is certain that it would give increased happiness to have the royal robe on Luirig. Then Mac Erca thrust his battle staff into the king's side, so that it was balancedⁿ: and he returned to his cleric, and the head of the king with him, as a token; et dixit, Lo, here is thy brother's head for thee, O Cairnech. Et dixit Cairnech, Leave me the bone, and eat thou the marrow, and every third coarb^p shall be thine for ever, here^p and in Eri.

Then he (Mac Erca) took the hostages and the power of the district into his own hands, conjointly with Cairnech, for seven years, as also the supreme sovereignty of Britain, and Cat^q, and Orc, and Saxonland.

And Mac Erca then committed an additional sin, that is, he took to himself the wife of Luirig, after many battles and conflicts with the king of France, to take his daughter from him, until at last the daughter

^o Coarb.—The conharb or coarb is the successor and representative of the original founder in any prelaey, episcopal or conventual. The word seems here used for the benefice itself. That the king was often the impropiator or commendatory of the coarbs, subject to the maintenance of the clergy of the mother church, appears from the Tribes and Customs of Hy-Many, p. 77, note ^v; Davis cit. ibid. An extensive secularization of that sort is here offered by Cairnech, as a reward to Muirchertach for killing his brother.—(H.) The word coarb, however, was also used to denote a successor in a civil office, as a king, chieftain, or judge; and this may possibly be its signification here; although the former is more probable, as the grant in this case comes from the spiritual chief, in return for supposed services done to the church.—(T.)

^p Here, i. e. in Britain; for Luirig is said to have been a king of or in Britain, and the scene of the legend appears to have been placed there.—(T.)

^q Cat.—Cat is Catanesia or Caithness, γ εϋ ρυε ρελερι μειϋ το .ι. Κοησταητιη, γ Γαεδεαλ Ριϋετ, ο ταατ

of which mention has already occurred. See p. 148, note f.—(H.)

^r The daughter, i. e. the daughter of the king of France. I suppose the meaning to be, that Luirig's wife was the daughter of the king of France; that after the death of her husband she was taken by Mac Erca; that this led to wars with the king of France, and that Mac Erca finally succeeded in retaining her. If there be any history in this, it is difficult to trace it in such records as are accessible to me. It is probably a pure fiction, like many other things in this fabula perquam inutilis, Σγελ ζοηρηγεϋη ζωη οατη ρυρμε, as it is truly called in a note in the handwriting of old Charles O'Conor on the margin of the Book of Ballymote.—(T.)

^s Constantine.—It is to be inquired what Constantine is here named as the son of Mac Erca. The Britons had a great notion of some royal saint so called, but distinct from Constantine the Great. Out of the tyrant Constantinus, who assumed the purple in Britain, and wore it in Arles, and his son, Constans the Monk, they have formed the kings of Britain, Cystennin Vendigaid, i. e. Saint Constantine, and his son, Constant Vanach, or Constans the Monk. They figure in the mythus of Vortigern, and also in the heroic mythus that ensues, Cystennin being father, and

Constant Vanach brother, to Emmrys Wledig and Uthyr Pendragon. Next comes Cystennin ap Cadwr, prince of Cornwall, who became king of all Britain in 542, and to whom Gildas in 543 or 544 addresses severe reproaches. The Brut of Kings affirms that he was slain in the third year of his reign, and buried in the Cor y Cewri, near Salisbury. It is observable that he was nearly the last king who could have been there buried, for in 552 Cynric, son of Cerdic, gained the victory of Searobyrig or Sarum. But others make a Saint Constantine out of him. Mr. Ritson, in his Cornish Saints, annexed to the Life of Arthur, p. 165, gives "Constantine, king, monk, and martyr, 11th March, 556. Domesday Book." Hector Boece asserts that he stole away to Ireland secretly, clam suis, received the tonsure in an Irish monastery, and suffered martyrdom while preaching to Pagans in Scotland.—Lib. ix. cit. Ussher, Brit. Eccles. p. 281. ed. 2. While John of Tinmouth says, that Constantine, king of Cornwall, died peaceably in the monastery of St. David of Menevia.—Cit. ibid. p. 282. I regard the whole story of his tonsure as a blundering fiction, having its origin in the history of Constans Monachus, son of Constantinus. The son of Cadwr, however, seems to have been the person to whom the legend of St. Constantine, king daughter^r fell into Mac Erca's hands, and she bare him four sons, viz. Constantine^s, and Gaedhal-Ficht (from whom descend the kings of Britain, and the kings of Britain-Cornu^t) ; Nellen (a quo gens Nellan of Britain, and abbot of Rathain Hua Shuanaigh in Westmeath, had reference. See Petrie on the Round Towers, p. 351, etc. Constantinus Rex Britonum regnum abdicavit et peregrinationis causâ venit Ratheniam tempore S. Mochuddæ. Cathal Maguire, cit. ibid. 353. This tale obtained such credit, as to have given the adjoining lands the name of Muigh Constantin before the period (perhaps not very recent) when the legend about the bard Rumann which Mr. Petrie quotes, was composed. Mochuda died in 637, with no reputation of peculiar longevity. —Lanigan, vol. ii. p. 102. It is, therefore, apparent, that Constantine ap Cadur could not have known him; much less have been his coarb, as Maguire pretends. But the failure of synchronism will rather give fresh impeachment to the story than raise doubts as to the person who is meant, for the day of commemoration is the same (March 11th) at Rathain as it was in Cornwall. We may regard the Irish legend as an explanation of what is read in Boece. As to the other story, that Constantine of Rathen was Constantine Mac Fergus, king of Albania or the Crutheni, it is wholly absurd and forged. For Constantine Mac Fergus the Piet acceded in 788 or 789, and died king in 819. But he is not found in the text of the ancient Irish Festilogies.

Now of all these persons, it is evident that St. Constantine ap Cadur, king, martyr, and monk, should be the son fabulously ascribed to king Mac Erca. For that son was a Cornubian king; and the date of Muirchertach, who died in 533, squares well with that of a son who (after a short reign) died in retirement in 556. Tighernach, ann. 588, mentions the Conversio ad Dominum (tonsure) of one Constantinus, with no further explanation.

The name of Gaedhal Ficht is merely that of the nation of Gwyddyl Fichti, or North Picts of Britain; and is far from unimportant, as an Erse recognition of that Welsh appellation. The Scotch being also of Mac Erca's family, the whole of Britain, by means of Constantine, of Gaedhal Ficht, and of Loarn, is made, in some sort, to derive itself from Ere, mother of Murchertach and Loarn. But such stuff will not bear a narrow examination.—(H.)

¹ Britain-Cornu, i. e. Cornwall.—(T.) The title of the Cornish saint, Iddawg Corn Prydain, is usually rendered Horn of Britain, in a personal sense, like Post Prydain, Pillar of Britain. But this passage confirms my suspicion, that Corn Prydain simply meant de Cornubiâ or Cornubiensis, Corn-Wealh.—(H.)

^u Coarb of Peter.—The coarb of Peter is the Pope. What follows is very obscure; but it seems to me to imply that Cairnech and his clergy, in consideration of his relationship to the heads of the Hy Niall, were placed in possession of the metropolitan see of Lyons, which in the Council of Clermont, A. D. 1092, was formally established as the primacy of all France. If so, we have now made him primate of France, of Armorica at Tours (taking that construction of the House of Martin, above, p. 180), of Wales and Cornwall, and in effect, of Ireland, of whose church he assumes the entire disposal.

The name Carnticeon, attached to Cornwall, I believe to mean Carentociawn, the diocese or jurisdiction of St. Carentoe, by whom that country was converted.—(H.)

There was a council held at Tours, in the year 566 or 567, on the 17th of November, in the church of St. Martin, in which Euphronius, bishop of Tours, presided, assisted by eight other prelates. The object of the Council was the reformation of discipline, and its twenty-seven canons which remain all relate to that subject. They may be found in the printed editions of the Councils, and there is an abstract of them in Richard, Analyse des Conciles, tom. i. p. 569, sq. 4°. Paris, 1772. From this it would seem that there was here possibly some foundation of fact in the mind of the writer of this legend. St. Cairnech was originally of Cornwall, and Nellan), and Scannal, the other son, a quo gens Scannail; i. e. it is in Eri the descendants of the two last are.

Now a great synod of the clergy of Europe was made at Tours of Martin, viz., three hundred and thirty-seven bishops, with the coarb of Peter^u, to meet Cairnech, Bishop of Tours and Britain-Cornu. and of all the British, to cast out every heresy, and to reduce every country to the discipline of the Church. And the chieftainship of the martyrs of the world was given to Cairnech, because martyrdom was his own choice. And Cairnech found thrice fifty bishops who made it also their choice to accompany Cairnech in pilgrimage, and that number went to Lien^v in pilgrimage for the sake of Mac Erca and Muiredhach.

Cairnech then set out to the Britons of Cornu or Carniceon, and a city was built by him under ground, in order that he might not see the earth, nor the country, nor the sky; and he increased the strength and sovereignty of Mac Erca for a year, and he (i. e. Cairnech) came to Eri before him, so that he was the first bishop of the Clann-Niall and of Temhar (Tara), and he was the first martyr and the first monk of Eri, and the first Brehon^w of the men of Eri also.

may have been connected with the Armorican Britons, whose affairs appear to have formed a part of the business of the above-mentioned Council of Tours, for its ninth canon prohibits the consecration of a Roman or Briton to the episcopal office by an Armorican bishop, without the license of the metropolitan (of Tours) or the provincial bishops. This would seem as if the Armorican bishops were then seeking to exercise an independent jurisdiction, perhaps, in conjunction with the

^w Brehon, i. e. judge. The author of the legend was determined to concentrate in the person of his hero every ecclesiastical perfection. This tale was either unknown to Colgan, or else he did not consider it worthy of any notice. He makes no mention of any tradition that Cairnech was a martyr, nor of any of the other particulars here recorded.—Vit. Carnechi, ad 28 Mart. p. 782.—(T.)

[^] Made war.—The legend speaks only of the triumphs of Mac Erca, and concludes with his elevation to the sovereignty of Ireland. For an account of his miserable death see Petrie on Tara Hill, pp. 119, 120, and the Four Masters, ad ann. 527; also Cossgrave in Vit. S. Cuthberti. c. i. ap Colgan, ad 20 Mart. p. 679, and the notes, p. 690.—(T.)

The writer of the legend might have gone on to say that St. Cairnech contributed to the cruel fate of King Mac Erca, by his bitter and not inoperative maledictions on him and his house; and was to him what Saints Ruadan and Columkille were to king Diarmid Mac Cearbhoil.—See Cambrensis Eversus, p. 74; Petrie on Tara Hill, p. 122.

It remains to inquire what is meant by the legend of Sarran conquering, and his son Luirig governing, Britain, England, and Pietland? Perhaps nothing. It is, however, true that, somewhere about those times, an Irish force conquered the island of Mona, or Anglesey. That island was recovered out of their hands by Caswallawn Lawhir, or the Longhanded, father to Maelgwn Gwynedd, king of Britain, who defeated their leader, Serigi or Sirigi, at the place marked by the Cerrig y Wyddyl or Stones of the Irishmen. Lhoyd and Powel, Deser. of Wales, p. 15;

Warrington, i. p. 40; Camden, ii. p. 60; Rowland's Mona, p. 147; Triads, series i. tr. 49; ser. ii. tr. 40. But Lhoyd, as well as D. Langhorne, Chro. Reg. Angl. p. 73, errs in saying that the Gwyddyl Fichti or Picts were in Mona, instead of the Gwyddyl or Irish; which is contrary to the Liber Triadum, misquoted by Langhorne. The latter makes the further mistake of supposing Gwyddyl Fichti to mean Cruthenians from Clanbo. The troops of Gwal the Irishman, says Triad 8, series 3, came into N. Wales, and settled there for twenty-nine years, until they were driven into the sea by Caswallawn ap Beli. But it is incredible, that the only two Caswallawns whose acts are recorded should both have driven the Irish out of North Wales; or that an Irish inroad of the fractional duration of twenty-nine years should be referred to Caesar's days; and I doubt not that the Irish settlers for twenty-nine years were those whom Caswallawn Lawhir expelled. They had taken strong hold of Mona. For Caswallawn, after his victory at the Cerrig, slew Sirigi at his town of Llan y Gwyddyl (Irish Church), now Holy-Head, which the Irish had built. Rowlands, ibid. Oval and circular trenches continue to be shewn in Mona as the ground plots of the Irish habitations, or cyttiau yr Gwyd-

Now, after this the Franks and the Saxons made war^s against Mac Erca, and he destroyed their country and their cities after a long contest; and the country and the power of the territories adjacent delodd.—Rowlands, p. 27. If the Irish population were then expelled (and not, as I rather suppose, subjugated), the memory of its having been firmly seated there appears in Golyddan's division of the Irish of Vortigern's day, into those of Ireland, Mona, and North Britain, “Gwyddyl Iwerddon, Mon, a Phrydyn.”—Arch. Myvyr. i. 156.

But Einion, father of Caswallawn, for whom his son reconquered Mona, was styled Anianus Rex Scotorum, i. e. Einion Vrenin o Wyddelodd, king of the Irishmen. See Vaughan, cit. Camden, ii. 69.

Now this Caswallawn is said to have reigned over Gwynedd seventy-four years, from 443 to 517. But that chronology is tainted with the omission of two generations, and the confounding of two different Einions. His true pedigree is Cynedda, Einion Urdd, Owain Danwyn, Einion Vrenin o Wyddelodd, Caswallawn Lawhir. See Rowlands, p. 155. Cambro-Briton, i. p. 247. The insertion of these generations may bring the date of Sirigi's death into the life-time of Murchertach, for he obtained the crown of Ireland in 513, and reigned over it till 533. Now, it seems possible, that the conquest of Mona by the Irish, may be the conquest of the British island, so largely exaggerated in this piece; and that the Luirig subsequently slain in Britain may be Sirigi, as most writers spell the name. Here we read that Mac Erca sinned in taking Luirig's widow for his wife; but in Lynch we read, that he perished by the vengeance of Sin or Sheen (daughter of Sigh), whose father he had put to death. Camb. Eversus, p. 74. In the prophecy of St. Cairneach it is said, “Sin is the woman who kills thee, Ó son of Ere, as I see!”

and it enumerates her eleven names, but does not give her father's name. See Petrie on Tara, p. 120. Sigh certainly approaches to Sirigh. If there be any truth at all in Muirchertach's having sojourned in Britain, it was probably enough among the Irish of Mona, and during the five years of anarchy, 508–13, preceding his accession, when Ireland had no king. That Cairneach may have presided over the Irish Church or Llan y Gwyddyl, that he may have quarrelled with Sirigi concerning the fortifications of that place, and that both he and Muirchertach were considered instrumental to his destruction, are all possible circumstances. But whether their suggestion throws any glimmer of light on this extravagant narration, I leave others to judge.—(II.)

^z Wonders.—The following account of the wonders of Ireland is taken from the Book of Ballymote, fol. 140, b. Another tract on the same subject, but differing both in the number and order of the “Wonders” described, is to be found in the MS. Library of Trinity College, Dublin, H. 3, 17, col. 725, the same volume from which the text of the Irish Nennius has principally been taken in the present work. It shall be referred to in these notes by the letter D. as before.

The Mirabilia Hiberniæ are described by Nennius, Giraldus Cambrensis, Ralph Higden in his Polychronicon, who relies entirely on Giraldus; O’Flaherty’s Ogygia, part iii. c. 50, p. 289. See also Ware’s

Antiquities of Ireland, by Harris, chap. xxxiv. p. 227.—(T.)

He landed at Fan-na-long on the Boyne, where he burned his ships, from which circumstance comes the name of Fan-na-long^y; and he killed the provincial kings of Ireland afterwards, and took their sovereignty by right for ever, for himself and for his descendants. And then the power and strength of Britain was destroyed after him.

Giraldus mentions this miracle, but gives a wrong name to the island: “Est insula quædam in occidentali Conactiæ solo posita, cui nomen Aren, a sancto Brendano, ut aiunt, consecrata. In hac hominum corpora nec humanantur, nec putrescunt; sed sub divo posita et exposita permanent incorrupta. Aran was not dedicated to St. Brendan, but to St. Endeus; see Cambr. Eversus, pp. 7, 8. Irish-glory is at present uninhabited; but it contains the ruins of some very ancient dwellings; and leeks and other garden herbs, introduced by the Monks of St. Brendan, are found growing wild in several places on the island.—(T.)

^c Loch n-Echach, i. e. the lake of Eochach or Eochadh, now Loch Neagh. Ogygia, p. 292. It is very generally believed that this lake possesses the property of petrifying wood. Harris, in his edit. of Ware's Antiquit. p. 228, quotes Boetius, Hist. Lapidum et Gemmarum, for a statement respecting Lough Neagh exactly the same as that of the text, but says that it has been found to be certainly false. It is popularly believed, however, to the present day. Nennius describes the miracle thus : " Est aliud stagnum quod facit ligna durescere in lapides: homines autem fingunt ligna, et postquam formaverint projiciunt in stagno, et manent in eo usque ad caput anni, et in capite anni lapis reperitur. Et vocatur Loch Echach." Comp. O'Flaherty, Ogygia, p. 290, n. 3. In D. this is the second wonder, and is thus described: Լօճ ռ-Էչաչ, ծօ նի ծօ քրսո շուի-

of seven years, so that the part that is in the earth becomes iron, and the part that is in the water becomes stone, and the part that is out of the water remains wood." Cambrensis has not mentioned this wonder, although he relates a story about the origin of this lake, which he says was originally a fountain, that was permitted to overflow the country, in consequence of the unnatural crimes of the inhabitants. And this too in Christian times, for he adds: " Quod piscatores aquæ illius turres ecclesiasticas, quæ more patriæ arctæ sunt et altæ necnon et rotundæ, sub undis manifeste sereno tempore conspiciunt."—Topogr. d. 2, c. 9. This story bears evident marks of a desire to brand the Irish with odious imputations; but if we omit the accusation of unnatural crimes, and the insinuation that the event took place in Christian times, the rest of the legend occurs, nearly as it is related by Cambrensis, in that curious collection of Irish historical and bardic traditions, the Dinnseanchus.

According to this Irish legend Lough Neagh is said to have broken forth in the signet, eum in non modicam erroris suspicionem venire.”—Cambr. Evers., p. 8, comp. also p. 100. It is evident, however, from the present tract, that similar tales were current among the Irish themselves, and therefore that Cambrensis did not, in this instance at least, draw wholly on his own invention. In D. the well of Galloon is thus described, and stands eighth in the list of wonders: Τίππα ζαβρα λῦν α ν-Οἰρηθια-λαῖβ λιαταῖζ να ρυλζυ ταρ α ταβαρῖαρ α ἡ-υἰρθε. “The well of Gabar [read Gabhal] Luin, in Oirghialla, it renders grey the hair on which its water is poured.” O’Flaherty omits this wonder.—(T.)

† Sliebh Bladhma, now Slieve Bloom. The irritable well here mentioned is the source of the River Bearbla, now the Barrow, in the barony of Hy-Regan, now Tinnahinch, in the north-west of the Queen’s County. It floods the lower country for miles in the rainy seasons, a circumstance which probably gave rise to the legend in the text. In D. this is the ninth wonder, and the story is told thus: Τίππα πλείβε δλαῶμα οἰ. Ὅο νί πλεδ-

chaῖ μορ οἶα ν-αἰεῖερ ἡ-ἰ ὁ οἶνε, νί κοἰρθεαῖο οἰ πλεοῖαδ κο ν-θενταρ ἰο-βαρτε κυρρ Κυρτε αζ ἀν εἰβραῖο. “The well of Slieve Bladhma then. It makes a great flood when it is looked upon by a man; the flood does not cease until the offering of the Body of Christ is made at the well.” Many similar traditions respecting wells still prevail amongst the peasantry in every part of Ireland. Mr. O’Donovan, in a communication to the Editor, says: “To this day the Irish retain the notion that if a pure spring well, whether consecrated or not, be defiled by throwing any nauseous filth into it, or washing soiled clothes in it, it will either dry up or migrate to some other locality, and many examples of such migrations are pointed out in every county in Ireland. The well of Slieve Bladhma appears to have been more deeply vengeful than any of our modern wells, since the glance of a human eye, or the touch of a human hand, was an offence which threatened inundation to the neighbourhood, and could only be expiated by the sacrifice of the Mass

v. The well of Sliabh Bladhna^f: its property is, if any one gazes on it, or touches it, its sky will not cease to pour down rain until mass and sacrifice are made at it.

vi. The well of Rath Both^g in Tir-Conaill: its property to every one who seeks it is, that if his life is to be long it rises up against him, and salutes him with a great murmur of waves. If his life is to be short it sinks down suddenly to the bottom.

vii. A well of sweet water in the side of the Corann^h; the property itself." O'Flaherty does not mention this well in his metrical list of wonders; but Cambrensis gives the following version of it, in which, as usual, he greatly improves upon the story: "Est fons in Momonia, qui si tactus ab homine, vel etiam visus fuerit, statim tota Provincia pluviis inundabit: quæ non cessabunt donec sacerdos ad hoc deputatus, qui et virgo fuerit a nativitate, tam mente quam corpore, Missæ celebratione in Capella (quæ non procul a fonte ad hoc dignoscitur esse fundata) et aquæ benedictæ, lactisque vaccæ unius coloris aspersione (barbaro satis ritu et ratione carente) fontem reconciliaverit." Top. dist. 2, c. 7; Comp. Cambr. Eversus, pp. 8, 9.—(T.)

^g Rath-Both, now Raphoe, in the county of Donegal. This wonder, which is not noticed by Giraldus or O'Flaherty, is the tenth in D., and is thus described: Ὁ ἄβυσσος ῥαθὰ βόθῃ α ἐπιθὸν Κοναίλλ μαῶ παεγλαὶ μετὶ τείδου δα φεγαῶ τῖβαίς τὰρ α βρυαχ ἀμαχ; μαῶ ἐπι ἰμοππο, ἢ τῖ τὰρ α ἠὸρ ἀμαχ. "The well of Rath-Both, in the Connell country: if the person who goes to look at it is long-lived it overflows out over its brink; but if he is withering it does not go forth over its edge." At Acha, or St. John's well, near Kilkenny, it was believed that the holy well overflowed at midnight on St. John's Eve; but no such property as that ascribed to the well in the text seems to be now remembered at Raphoe.—(T.)

^h The Corann, a plain from which rises Sliabh Gamh, near Colooney, in the county of Sligo; on the side of which mountain this well is still pointed out, and the popular belief still attributes to it the property described in the text. Giraldus mentions this well, but he places it erroneously on the top of the mountain; "Est et in Conactia fons dulcis aque in vertice montis excelsi, et procul a mari, qui die naturali bis undis deficiens, et toties exuberans marinas imitatur instabilitates."—Top. Dist. 2. c. 7. From the expressions marked in italics it would seem that Giraldus had before him a copy of the Irish account of these wonders, or a translation of it. No marvellous story lost any of γαδ̄ ρᾱ κορμᾱιυρ̄ ιη̄ μαρα. "There is a well in the side of the Corann, which flows and ebbs after the similitude of the sea." A miracle similar to this has been already given amongst the wonders of Man. See above, p. 121.—(T.)

¹ The strand of Eothail.—The great carn on Trawohelly strand still remains, but its miraculous property seems to be no more than this, that it is never covered by the sea. "Super fluctus mirabiliter emittens," as O'Flaherty says, Ogygia, p. 174. It is recorded in the account of the battle of Magh Tuireadh that this carn was raised over Eochaidh Mac Eire the last king of the Firbolgs who was killed on the strand of Trawohelly by the Tuathade-Dannan, headed by Nuadh of the silver hand, A. M. 2737, Ogyg. part iii. c. 10. Keating in loc.

The miraculous property of the carn of Trawohelly is spoken of in the Libellus de Matribus Sanctorum, as Colgan calls it, and which he attributes to Aengus the Culdee. After enumerating the seven daughters of Dallbronach of Dal Conchobhair in the Decies of Bregia, and the long list of saints sprung from them, this document proceeds (Book of Leinster, fol. 239, b. col. 4. MS. Trin. Coll. H. 2. 18.) viii. The cairn of the strand of Eothailⁱ. It is not the less seen when the tide is full than when it is at low ebb, and notwithstanding that the tide rises over the large rocks on the beach around it to and fro.

ix. A stone in Loch na n-Onchon^j, in a mountain near Glenn-da-Loch; its property is, if it be struck with a wand by way of assault, rain will ensue, and sunshine after.

x. These are the three wonders of Teamhar^k, viz.: a youth of seven at the Cairn of Tragh Eothaile, and they made a covenant of union, and they said of whosoever should break that union on earth, his soul shall not reach heaven, and he shall not recover his station on earth. And as for this cairn at which we have met, the sea shall never cover it until it overflows the surface of Hy-Fiachrach. And Bishop Mane said, “ Whosoever shall dissolve the union of our saints,

Whether he be degenerate, or whether he be mad,
Shall not inhabit the firm earth,
His soul shall not reach to heaven.”

See also the copy of the same tract preserved in the Book of Lecan, fol. 43, and O'Donovan's Hy-Fiachrach, p. 117, note ^e. The cairn of Trawohelly is the eighth in O'Flaherty's metrical list of wonders; it is not mentioned in D.—(T.)

^j Loch na n-Onchon, i. e. the Lake of Otters. This is the name of a lake in the hills near Glandaloch, perhaps the same which is now called Loch-na-hanagan. There is a stone called the Deer-stone in the Glen itself, on the south side of the lower lake, of which some similar tales are told; but the original traditions are now so much corrupted by the ignorance of the guides and the folly of visitors to the lakes, that no dependence can be placed on them, as representing ancient thought.—(T.)

^k Teamhar.—The three wonders of Tara are given separately in D. The first is there the nineteenth wonder, and is thus described: Mac .xiii. m-bliaócan ro bac a Teamhair, 7 ro cuirim clano fon cuirim riu. “A boy of seven years old that was at Tara, and begot children at that age.”

The grave of the dwarf is the fifteenth wonder in D., and is spoken of in these words: Uige m abac a Teamhair, tuirpóirí mairí do cach eap beg 7 mor. “The grave of the dwarf at Teamhar; it is three feet long to every one whether great or small.” The meaning is, that every one, whether a child or a full-grown man, who attempts to measure it, finds it exactly three of his own feet long. O'Flaherty has thus versified this wonder,

Another form of this idea may be termed the Procrustean; where a grave (Giraldus, Itin. Camb. ii. cap. 3, Higden,
 p. 189. where read se conformem for decon- formem), or a bed (Sir J. Ware, Ant. Hib.
 ed. Harris, p. 63), fits the length of whosoever lies down in it. Such was the grave upon Crugmawr or Pen Tychryd Mawr, in the vale of Aeron, in Cardigan.

“ Which to the form of every Visitor conforms itself,
 Where if armour be left Entire at nightfall
 Certainly at daybreak
 You shall find it broken.”—Higd.

The tychryd mawr, great house of shuddering, was the palace of the chief of the giants; and it is well if no atrocity was connected herewith. See as above cited, and Hynavion Cymreig, pp. 155, 156.

The Lia Fail is the seventeenth wonder in D. and is thus described: Cloch fil a Tempacḡ .i. lia fail, no geirpó fo corab each am no gabáó piḡe n-Érind.
 “There is a stone at Tamhar, i.e. Lia Fail, which used to roar under the feet of every one that assumed the kingdom of Eri.”
 For an account of this stone see Ware’s Antiquities by Harris, pp. 10, 124; and Petrie on Tara Hill, p. 138, where the question is discussed whether this famous stone was ever removed from Tara, and whether it is the same which now forms the seat of the ancient coronation chair in Westminster Abbey, as is generally sup-

 loe, an old grave-yard, giving name to a parish dedicated to St. Molua, at the foot of Sliabh Bladhma, in the barony of Upper Ossory, Queen’s County: “In confinio Lageniensium et Munoniensium, inter regiones Osraigi et Hele et Laiges,” are the words in which the situation of the ancient Church is described in the life of St.

seven years of age begetting children; and the grave of the dwarf, which measured five feet for every one, whether small or large; and the Lia Fail, i. e. the stone which shouted under every king whom it recognised in the sovereignty of Teamhar.

xi. There is a mill-pond at Cluain-fearta Molua¹; its property is, the people who bathe in it at the neck^m of the pond become lepers: it injures not if entered in any other place.

xii. The grave of Mac Rustaing at Rus-Echⁿ, in Cailli Follamhain, in Molua, and they apply exactly to the site of the present grave-yard. Fleming, Collect. p. 374. Ussher, Primord. p. 943. Lanigan, vol. ii. p. 206. St. Molua's day was the 4th of August. No trace of the pond, or tradition of its wonderful property, is now to be found in the parish.

In D. this is the eighteenth miracle, and is described thus: Ατα λινο μιλινο α Cluain-Fheartra Molua, η claiμαιη να οαινε τιαγαυδ ιννετι αετ manaiη aenτα-δασα Molua. Ατα μαδ αιλε ιριν λινο ceona, δα τραη δεη αταρpu oenann pudair maδ ann rin τιαγαυρ ιννετι. "There is a millpond at Cluain Fearta-Molua, and the people that bathe in it become lepers, except the monks in communion with Molua. There is another place in the same pond, twelve feet distant and it doth no harm if it is at this place it is entered." The monks evidently put out this story to secure their own bathing-place from public intrusion.—(T.)

^m Neck.—The word βραιηιε denotes the sluice or narrow canal through which the water flows from the linn or pond upon the wheel of the mill. Mr. O'Donovan informs me that these words are still so used in the County Kilkenny, and probably in most other parts of Ireland.—(T.)

ⁿ Rus-Ech.—The old church of Ros-each, now Russagh, is still remaining, near the village of Street, in the north of the county of Westmeath, adjoining the County of Longford, but the grave of Mac Rustaing is no longer pointed out or remembered. Mac Rustaing was the maternal brother of St. Coemain Brec, and was probably an ecclesiastic, as he is spoken of as one of the eight distinguished scholars of Armagh, about the year 740. See Mac Conglinne's Vision, Leabhar Breac, p. 219. St. Coeman Brec, Abbot of Ros-each, died 14th September, A. D. 615 (Ussher, Primord. Ind. Chron.), on which day he is mentioned in the Felire of Ængus. At the end of the month of September, in the MS. of the Felire preserved in the Leabhar Breac, there is the following account of the grave of Mac Rustaing: Coeman δρεcc Mac Nippe .i. o Ropp

Mac Rustaing's grave is the twentieth wonder in D., and is thus spoken of: Anocul mic Rurtaing noeo pedann bean apεgαθ zan zape, no epore. “The grave of Mac Rustaing; no woman can look at it without a laugh or scream.” —(T.)

° Cuilli Fochladh, or the wood of Fochladh. See O'Donovan's Hy-Fiachraich, p. 463, where the situation of this celebrated wood is ascertained. The story of a voice from the wood of Fochladh is told in the Confessio of St. Patrick, the Hymn of St. Fiech, and all the Lives except that attributed to Probus. The Confessio does not speak of the voice as coming from children, and neither do the second and fourth Lives in Colgan. This was, therefore, probably the original story; but Fiech and the Tripartite Life speak of children; μακραθ Caille Poclαθ (Fiech, n. 8); pueri in sylva Fochladensi, (Trip. i. c. 30); and the other Lives add to this in Meath, no woman has power to look at without an involuntary shriek, or a loud, foolish laugh.

that they were children yet unborn; “vox infantium ex uteris matrum ex regionibus Connactorum Hoch aillilo fortach [which Colgan interprets, heu, accede huc fer auxilium], (Vit. 3^a c. 20); infantuli Hiberni maternis uteris inclusi voce clara clamantes,” (Joecin, cap. 21). The scholiast on the hymn of Fiech gives us the names of these children, telling us moreover their number and their sex: he adds, that their voices were heard throughout all Ireland, and even by Pope Celestin at Rome. “Ipse Celestinus quando ordinabatur Patricius audiebat vocem infantium eum advocantium. Infantes autem, de quibus hic sermo est, vocabantur Crebra et Lessa, duæ filiæ Gleranni filii Nenii; et hodie coluntur ut sanctæ, et ab ipso Patricio erant baptizatæ: et in ecclesia de Foreland juxta Muadium fluvium [the Moy] ad occidentem, requiescunt. Quæ autem tunc in ventre matris existentes dicebant, erant hæc: Hibernienses omnes clamant ad te. Et hæc sæpius ab eis decantata audiebantur per Hiberniam totam vel usque ad ipsos Romanos.” Joecin (c. 59) mentions the baptism of the daughters of Gleran, and tells us that they were the same who had called St. Patrick out of their mother’s womb, and that they afterwards became saints; but he does not give their names. The Tripartite Life gives us their names, and although, in the place already cited, the author had called them pueri, and in another place (ii. c. 77) he speaks of multos infantes in utero matrum existentes, yet here (ii. c. 86), he says: “Ibi vir sanctus baptizavit, Deoque consecravit duas celebratæ sanctitatis virgines Crebream et Lassaram, Gleranno viro nobili Cuminei filio natas. Hæ sunt quæ inclusæ in utero materno, in regione de Caille-Fochladh, referuntur dudum ante in persona [i. e. in the name of, or on behalf of,] infantium Hiberniæ clamasse ad S. Patricium, dum esset in insulis maris Tyrreni, efflagitando ut seposita mora ad Hibernos convertendos acceleraret: earumque sacræ exuviæ ut patronarum loci, in summa veneratione in ecclesia de Killfhorclann juxta Muadium versus occidentem asservantur.” See Ussher, Prim. p. 832. The children of Caille Fochladh are not mentioned among the wonders of Ireland in D., or by O’Flaherty.—(T.)

 “There are certain people in Eri, viz.:
 the race of Laignne Faclaidh, in Ossory, they pass into the forms of wolves whenever they please, and kill cattle according to the custom of wolves, and they quit their own bodies; when they go forth in the wolf-forms, they charge their friends not to remove their bodies, for if they are moved they will not be able to come again into their bodies; and if they are wounded while abroad, the same wounds will be on their bodies in their houses;
 and the raw flesh devoured while abroad will be in their teeth.” Giraldus Cambrensis tells a story of two wolves who had been a man and woman of the Ossorians, but were transformed into wolves every seven years, in virtue of a curse imposed on their race by Saint Naal or Natalis, abbot of Cill-na-managh, or Kilmanagh, in the Co. Kilkenny, who flourished in the sixth century. They had been banished to Meath, where they met a priest in a wood, a short time before Earl John came to Ireland in the reign of Henry II., and retaining, it seems, the use of language, they foretold the conquest of Ireland by the English. The following is a part of what the wolf said to the priest: “De quodam hominum genere sumus Ossyriensium; vnde quolibet septennio per imprecationem sancti cuiusdam Natalis scilicet Abbatis, duo, videlicet, mas et femina, tam à formis, quam finibus exulare coguntur. Formam enim humanam prorsus exuentes induunt lupinam. Completo vero septennii spacio, si forte superstites fuerint, aliis duobus ipsorum loco simili conditione subrogatis, ad pristinam redeunt tam patriam quam naturam.”—Top. Dist. 2, c. 19.

xiv. The descendants of the wolf^p are in Ossory. They have a wonderful property. They transform themselves into wolves, and go forth in the form of wolves, and if they happen to be killed with flesh in their mouths, it is in the same condition that the bodies out of which they have come will be found; and they command their families not to remove their bodies, because if they were moved, they could never come into them again.

xv. Great thunder happened in the time of Donogh^q, son of Donall, Cambrensis, whose credulity was unbounded, gave full credit to this strange tale. Not so Fynes Moryson, who holds it up to ridicule; but it appears from what he says, that the tale was currently believed in his time: "It is ridiculous," (he says), "which some Irish (who will be believed as men of credit) report of men in these parts [Upper Ossory and Ormond] yeerely turned into wolves, except the abundance of melancholy humour transports them to imagine that they are so transformed."—Itin. p. iii., c. 5, p. 157.—(T.) ^q Donogh.—Donogh, son of Donall, son of Murrough, was king of Ireland from A. D. 770 to 797, according to O'Flaherty's chronology, Ogyg., p. 433. The Four Masters have placed the great storm, here counted as one of the wonders of Ireland, under the year 799; their words are: Ἐπιπνεύσας ἄνεμος ἐπὶ τῇ νύκτι τοῦ ἁγίου Πάτρικου ἐγένετο ἄνεμος καὶ κεραυνὸς ἐπὶ τῇ νύκτι τοῦ ἁγίου Πάτρικου, καὶ ἐκείνην τὴν νύκτα ἐκείνην ἐγένετο ἄνεμος καὶ κεραυνὸς ἐπὶ τῇ νύκτι τοῦ ἁγίου Πάτρικου, καὶ ἐκείνην τὴν νύκτα ἐκείνην ἐγένετο ἄνεμος καὶ κεραυνὸς ἐπὶ τῇ νύκτι τοῦ ἁγίου Πάτρικου. "A violent wind, thunder, and lightning occurred this year on the day before the feast of Patrick, so that a thousand and ten men were killed in the territory of Corco Blaisein; and the sea divided the island of Fitaie into three parts." The island of Fithi is a small island, now called Mutton Island, on the coast of the county of Clare, opposite Kilmurry Ibrickin. The two other parts of the original island are still to be seen near it; they are insignificant islets, or rather lofty masses of rock, close to Mutton Island. Mr. O'Donovan remarks, in a communication to the Editor, that the barony of Ibrickin was originally a part of Coreo-Bhaiscín, before the Uí Bracáin, ór Mac Gormans, settled in that country. This fact appears from the position of Mutton Island, which is here, and by the Four Masters, said to be in Coreo-Bhaiscín, and also from the Life of St. Senan, who was the patron of the Coreo-Bhaiscín race —(T.)

† Clonnaicnois.—The first of these three wonders is the twenty-third wonder of Ireland in D.: Ro baí óime a Cluam-mic-noir, iar teacć a cino de tpe tpeblaio, ḡ ro baí .vii. m-bliáona 'na beaḡaiḡ iar riu, tpe na níeíde, no cumḡeáó biaó ḡ no canḡeó. "There was a man at Clonnaicnois, after his head came off through disease, and he was seven years afterwards living; through his trunk he called for food and consumed it." The same story is told by

Tighernach, ad an. 549, and by Keating under the reign of Tuathal Maelgarbh (A. D. 533-544), who tells us that this headless wonder lived in that state for four years among the monks of Clonnaicnois, his head having dropped off at the fair of Tailten, in consequence of his having sworn falsely on the relic called the hand of St. Kieran. This story is certainly of great antiquity, and was once extensively believed; it probably originated in a figurative mode of describing a loss of memory or reason, or some ecclesiastical or spiritual defect. In a note at August 4, in the Felire of Aengus, a story is told of St. Molua, who went into a church with St. Congall, and, to their astonishment, every one in the church, including Congall and Molua themselves, appeared headless. The following explanation of this appearance is then given: Ip de aca fo ar Comḡall .i. m-annch-araḡu aḡabḡ, ḡ a tḡra cen cheano, ḡ

Donall, son of Murrough, king of Ireland, which killed one thousand and ten persons in the territory of Corco Baiscinn, and divided Inis-Fithi into three parts.

xvi. Three wonders at Clonmacnois^r. A man without a head during the space of seven years. Inte Bucuc^s was his name, i. e. Maltamain. The blind man who used to dive into the Shannon and bring forth an eel in each of the forks of his hands and feet. The grave^t which was dug in Cluain, and it was not known or heard that there was an interment there, and there was a great-bearded man found in it, covered with drops of red blood, and a covering of green birch brooms about him. Fifteen feet long was he, and there were thirty feet of earth over him.

xvii. Loch Laigh^u, in the territory of Umaile, in Connaght, ran off into the sea, so that nothing of it remained but its place.

α τὰ χαρῖ cen chinō; ap ip colano cen cheno ðume cen anmápaic. “The reason of this,” said Comgall, “is the death of my spiritual director; and I am without a head, and ye are without heads, because a man without a spiritual director is a man without a head.” Comgall then appoints Molua his confessor, and immediately the congregation appears to him with heads as usual.—(T.)

^s Inte Bucuc.—Keating calls him Abacuc; the word inte signifies “the man,” or “the individual,” and is a title used much as we now use “Mr.,” or as Dominus was used to monks and the clergy.—(T.)

^t The grave.—This and the foregoing wonder are omitted in D. The story of the blind fisherman is not told elsewhere, as far as the Editor knows. The legend of the giant’s grave appears to be connected with the adventure of the poet Mac Caisi, which will be found in the note, p. 210—(T.)

^u Loch Laigh, a lake in the territory of Umhaile, the ancient country of the O’Malleys, anglicised “the Owles,” a district comprising the barony of Murrisk (called umall uacépaic, or the upper), and the barony of Burreishoole (called umall iocépaic, the lower), in the county of Mayo. See O’Donovan’s Hy-Fiachrach, p. 499, and the map. The disappearance of Loch Laigh is recorded by the Four Masters at the year 848 : Loic Laoiḡ hī epic Umall la Connac̄c do elud. “Loch Laigh, in the territory of Umhaill, in Connaught, ran off;” [or was evaporated].—(T.)

‡ Dumha Dessa, i. e. the monumental mound or tumulus of Dess, the exact site of which has not been ascertained; but Mr. O'Donovan thinks it is probably situated in Cianachta Breagh, near Duleek, in the county Meath. The Annals of Clonmacnois (Mageoghegan's transl.), record the birth of the wonderful child at the year 870, in these words: “There was a child borne at Crewelaraugh, near Clonvicknose, this year, who was heard to call upon God by distinct words, saying Good God in Irish, being but of the age of two months.” This event is also recorded in the Annals of Ulster, at the year 883, and by the Four ^yMac Coisi.—This was probably intended for the Erard or Urard Mac Coisi, who was chief poet to Ferghal O'Rourke, king of Connaught, and died at Clonmacnois, in the year 983, according to Mageoghegan's Annals, or in 990, according to Tighernach. There was another poet named Erard Mac Coisi, who died in 1023, according to the Annals of the Four Masters, and was chief poet to king Mael-seachlainn (or Malachy) II. See O'Reilly's Writers, ad ann. 990 and 1023. This is the 24th wonder in D., and is thus given: Ro ba m file Mar Coiri la ann for bpu na doimde, co facaio na h-ela for doimo coruibraig h-eh oib, m zan do facaib arreaso po ba ann bean; cor i arraig m filio oi cio pobizh ann puo; a n-galar epom ar ri so basur, 7 ba doig le munter do eusar eg copum tucrat oemna iph ricera. The poet asked her wherefore she was there. I was in grievous sickness, said she, and it was supposed by my people that I died, but demons put me into this shape. The poet took her with him, and restored her to her own people afterwards." Stories of this kind, in which the agents are supposed to be the fairies, are common to this day in every part of Ireland. A full and very particular account of Mac Coisi's adventure is to be found in a legend transcribed by Mr. Eugene Curry, from a MS. in the possession of Mr. John Kennedy, of Dublin. The story is too long for insertion here, but it differs very much from that given in the text, if indeed it be not a different adventure of the same poet; it places the event in the reign of Congalach, son of Maelmthigh (see n. ^a, p. 211). Mac Coisi was on the bank of Loch Leblinn (now Loch Leane, near Fore, Co. Westmeath), when he saw a beautiful woman, of great size, "beyond that of the women of the time," dressed in green, sitting alone, and weeping bitterly. He approached her, and she told him that her husband had that day been killed at Sidh Chodail, and was buried at Clonmacnois. Mac Coisi mentioned this to king Congalach, who set out to Clonmacnois to test the truth of the story. The clergy there could give no account of it; but a monk died that night, and on digging his grave they found fresh blood and leaves, and at length, buried very deep, with his face down, the corpse of a giant twenty-five feet in height. They put the body down again, and the next day, on opening the grave, which to all appearance was as they had left it, the corpse was not to be found. This legend bears a curious resemblance to some circumstances in Sir Walter Scott's beautiful fiction of the White Lady of Avenel.—(T.)

^z Airthera.—The district now called Orior, regio orientaliū, containing two baronies of the Co. Armagh. The wells here spoken of are now forgotten, and have lost their terrors. This is the fourteenth wonder in D., and is somewhat differently described, thus: Ata da zibraio a n-Oirtearab .i. o Ard Maca rair, in ti ihear upei in oara zibraio biḡ epḡ, 7 biḡ pæglach, in ti ihear apoile, 7 in fear nechtar doib peḡ a ceile, conad aipe rin na lamap uipe nechtar doib o'ol. where he perceived a flock of swans; whereupon he threw a stone at them, and it struck one of the swans on the wing. He quickly ran to catch it, and perceived that it was a woman. He inquired tidings from her, and what had happened unto her, and what it was that sent her thus forth. And she answered him: "In sickness I was," said she, "and it appeared to my friends that I died, but really it was demons that spirited me away with them." And the poet restored her to her people.

xxii. There are two wells in Airthera^z, to the eastward of Ardmacha. He who tastes of the one of them is immediately dead. If the other well is gazed upon three times, it immediately swells, and drowns the person who so gazes. Hence it is that people dare not touch them, except wretches [i. e. the desperate] alone.

xxiii. Congalach^a, son of Mailmithigh, was at the fair of Taillten on a certain day, and he perceived a ship in the air. He saw one of them [the crew] cast a dart at a salmon. The dart fell down in the presence of the fair, and a man came out of the ship after it. When his head came down it was caught by a man from below.

^a Congalach.—He was king of Ireland from A. D. 944 to 956, in which year he was killed by the Danes.—Ogyg. p. 435. The fair, or rather public sports of Taillten, now Telltown, near Navan, in the county of Meath, were celebrated, and continued to be frequented by all ranks, until the reign of Roderic O'Conor, who died A. D. 1198. This unmeaning story is the twenty-fifth wonder in D., and is thus related: Ḍaí Congalach mac Mailmíthigh co fópmna fear n-Éreann uime la ann a n-aenach, co fácaðar in luíng aranaep co zapplaig fear arpoe, .i. arpin luíng, gablach a n-ðeagauig brácaim; co zappla ann pin n-oipeacéur in píg. "Congalach, son of Mailmithigh, with the greater part of the men of Eri around him there, was at the fair, when they saw a ship in the air, and a man out of it, i. e., out of the ship, cast a fork against a salmon. ^b*Torinis of Martin*, i. e. Tours in France. The uamh, or Cave of St. Martin was probably Desertmartin, in the county of Londonderry, where the memory of St. Martin was held in great veneration. Of Uadangal, son of Baethamhnas, mentioned in this legend, nothing is known. In the ancient tract on the names of celebrated Irish women, preserved in the Book of Lecan (fol. 193-202), three women of the name Cantighern are mentioned. One was the wife of Fiachna, son of Baedan, king of Ulidia, who was killed, according to the Four Masters, A. D. 622. Another was Cantighern, daughter of Guaire O'Lochtmain, and wife or mistress to Flann O'Maelsheachlain. Guaire, her father, was a lector in Clonmaenoi, and died, according to the Four Masters, in 1054. The third was Caintighern, a daughter of Cellaeh Cualann of Leinster. She died, according to the Four Masters, in 728.—(T.)

^c Bablu and Biblu.—Nothing is known of this couple beyond what is here said. The meaning probably is that they continue still alive, like the tradition about Nero, Arthur in Avallon, &c.—(T.)

Upon which the man from above said, "I am being drowned," said he. "Let him go," said Congalach; and he was allowed to come up, and he went away from them, swimming in the air, afterwards.

xxiv. A certain pilgrim of the Gaedheliains happened to arrive at Torinis of Martin, on his way from Rome. There he saw his mother distributing milk and flesh meat to the poor of the Lord. He took away from her the cover of the muidh [vessel] which contained the milk, and she was looking for it in his presence. And the mother had not gone thither at all, but it was in Ros Ailither she made her distribution at home. And it was in honour of Martin she made it. And it was Cantighern, mother of Ua Dungal, son of Baethambnas, that made the distribution. And he shewed the cover of the vessel to his mother in a year after his coming home, and she recognised it, and it fitted exactly her own muidh. So that it is manifest from this that every distribution of alms that is made in Martin's Cave is as effectual as if distributed at Toirinis of Martin^b.

xxv. The couple [man and wife] who are alive to the east of Clonard. Bablu and Biblu^c are their names.

^g Finnabhair-abha, i. e. the Bright Field of the River, now Fennor, a townland giving name to a parish in the barony of Duleek, county Meath. Several places in Ireland were called Finnabhair, which

Jocelin, Vit. S. Patr. c. 94, translates, "albus campus;" the place there spoken of, and in the Tripartite Life (part iii., c. 4), was in the diocese of Clogher; but Finnabhair Abha was evidently in Meath, as appears from its being mentioned in the text in connexion with Slane, Telltown, and Tara; and in the following passage from the Calendar of the O'Clerys, it is said to be on the River Boyne: 2 Maii. Neachtain, deirgiobail Paopac, o Cill Uinche i γ-Connallib Muirtheimne, γ o Fionnabhair aba por bpu domne. Mac do Liaman riup Paopac e. "Maii 2. Neachtain, a disciple of St. Patrick, of Cill Uinche in Conaille Muirtheimne, and of Fionnabhair-abha, on the banks of the Boyne. He was the son of Leamhan, the sister of Patrick." In a gloss on the name of this place in the Felire of Aengus (ad 2 Maii), it is said to be i m-δρεζαib, "in Bregia;" so that Finnabhair-abha is completely identified with the modern Fennor in Meath. See Ordnance

It is the twelfth wonder in D, and is thus described: Ṭibpa pil a pleib Ṭaiḡen, plaṭ cuill mozi, plaṭ umoḡeann tic aḡoḡe; no umoḡeann innozi ḡ plaṭ chuill aḡoḡe. “There is a well in a mountain in Leinster; a rod of hazle put into it, comes out a rod of ash; or ash put in, and a rod of hazle comes out of it.”—(T.)

ⁱ A belfry of fire.—Cloiṭṭeacá teneao, i. e. a steeple, or belfry of fire, a column of fire: the word cloiṭṭeacá is the name given to the round towers in every part of Ireland. Ros Dela, the place where the miraculous tower of fire was seen, is now Ross-dalla, a townland in the parish of Durrow, near Kilbeggan, county of Westmeath. The phenomenon is thus described by the Four Masters, at the year 1054: Cloiṭṭeacá teneao oo faircc-pin ipin aep uap Rop beala dia oomnacá peile Ḥuirḡi fri pe coig nuap eoin duḡá oiaipmoide mo ḡ aḡp, ḡ aon en moḡ ma medon, ḡ no teiḡid ná heoin beḡa po aeiḡib pioe an tan teiḡcoip ip in cloiṭṭeacá. “A belfry of fire was seen in the air, over Ross-deala, on the Sunday of the feast of St. Guirgi [George] for five hours; blackbirds innumerable passing into and out of it, and one large bird in the middle of them, and the little birds went under his wings when they went into the belfry.”

In the year 1054, the feast of St. George was on Saturday; the annalist must, therefore, mean the year 1055, unless we suppose him to speak of the day after as “the Sunday of the feast of St. George.”—(T.)

i Loch Cre.—This lake is now dried up, but the island remains, surrounded by a bog, and contains the ruins of a church, which still exhibit a beautiful specimen of the architecture of the eleventh century. The bog is now called, from the island, Mom na h-mpé, “the Bog of the Island,” and the name is anglicised Monahinsha or Monainsha. It is situated in a townland of the same name, in the parish of Corbally, barony of Ikerrin, which was formerly a part of the district of Eile, in the Co. Tipperary, about two miles S. E. of the town of Roscrea. The church is figured in Ledwich's Antiquities of Ireland, p. 115 (2nd edit.), and appears to have been dedicated to St. Helair, or Hilary; see the Calendar of O'Clery, at Sept. 7. The story of the island in which no female could live is as old as the time of Giraldus Cambrensis, who mentions also another island in the same lake called, Insula Viventium (nip na m-beo), in which no man could die, but in the text both properties appear to be attributed to the same island: “Est lacus” (he says) “in Momonía Boreali, duas continens insulas, unam majorem et alteram minorem. Major ecclesiam habet antiquæ religionis. Minor vero capellam cui pauci cœlibes quos Cælicolas vel Colideos vocant devote deservunt. In majorem nunquam femina vel fœminei sexus aliquod animal intrare potuit, quin statim moriretur. Probatum est hoc multoties per canes et catos, aliæque sexus illius animalia, quæ periculi causa frequenter advecta statim occubuerunt, &c. . . . In minori vero insula nemo unquam mortuus fuit, vel morte naturali mori potuit. Unde et Viventium birds used to nestle in his feathers when they went into the belfry. And they all came out together. And they took up dogs with them in their talons, and they let them drop down to earth and they dead. The birds flew away from that place afterwards, and the wood upon which they perched bent under them to the ground. And the oak upon which the said great bird perched was carried by him by the roots out of the earth, and where they went to is not known.

Insula vocatur.—Dist. 2. c. 4. From the mention of Culdees in the above passage, Ledwich has taken occasion to connect with Monaincha some of the most absurd of his speculations. See Lanigan Ecl. Hist. vol. iv., p. 290.—(T.)

^k Cill Ceis.—This place has been identified by Mr. O'Donovan, who proves that it is the same which is now anglicised Kilkeas, and still called in Irish Cill Céipe by the neighbours. It is a parish in the diocese of Ossory, barony of Knocktopher, in the county of Kilkenny. The well is spoken of by Giraldus, who calls it the well of St. Lucherinus: "Apud Ossyriam est molendinum Sancti Lucherini abbatis, quod diebus Dominicis nihil, de furto vero vel rapina nunquam molit."

Dist. 2, c. 51. But the peculiarity of excluding women is ascribed by Cambrensis to the mill of St. Fechin, at Fore, in Westmeath. Ibid. c. 52. The word ποτα inserted between brackets in the text, is added by a later hand, and signifies a handfull. This is the twenty-first wonder in D, and is thus decribed: Μυλλεανδ Chille Ceipe α η-Ορραιγιβ ηοου μελεανδ δε δομναιζ αετ κυε ηα η-αιγεαδ, η ηι μελεανη αρβυρ ζαιου οο ζρεη. van has shewn to be the same which is now called Templeshanbo, in the diocese of Ferns, situated at the foot of the mountain called in Irish Suirghe Cairghean, and in English, Mount Leinster. The situation of this church, which was unknown to Archdall and Lanigan, is thus described in the Life of St. Maidhoc, c. 26. published by Colgan (Acta SS. p. 211): “Quodam die venit S. Moedoc ad monasterium quod dicitur Seanbotha, juxta radices montis qui dicitur Scotice Suighe Lagen, id est Sessio Lagenensium.” The monastery was founded by St. Colman O’Fiachrach, whose memory was there celebrated on the 27th of October. Colgan, ibid. p. 217, n. 26, and p. 210, n. 46. The story of St. Colman’s ducks is now forgotten in the neighbourhood, but it is told by Cambrensis, Top. Hib. Dist., 2, c. 31; it occurs also in the following note on the Felire Aenguis, at the 27th of October: Colman uā ριαχραχ̄ .i. hī ρ̄n̄bothaib̄ ρōlā ῑ n-ῡib̄ C̄nōp̄ēlaīz̄. ^m Tested.—The popular belief ascribes this peculiarity of Ireland to the prayers of St. Patrick; an opinion which is defended by Dr. David Roth, in his Elucidationes in Jocelinum, published by Messingham, Floril. p. 127, sq. But it is rejected by Colgan, Append. v. ad Acta S. Patr. c. 20 (Trias, p. 255), and by Lanigan (vol. i. p. 252, n. 108), who maintain that there never were any venomous reptiles in Ireland. In D. this freedom from venomous creatures is also mentioned last, as the twenty-eighth wonder:

they were put by mistake of night, with the water of the pond, into a pot upon a fire, and although all the woods of the earth were burned under that pot, they would not be injured, nor would the water become hot.

xxxiv. There live not then, toads nor serpents in all Eri, and even though they be brought from other places unto it they die immediately; and this has been tested^m. Except the mouse, the wolf, and the fox, there has not been, and there shall not be, any noxious animal in it. And it is temperate of heat and cold. The sea^a will come over it seven years before the day of Judgment. Finit. Amen. Finit^o.

These are the principal wonders of all Eri we know.”—(T.)

^a The sea.—Ralph Higden (Polychron. lib. 5, c. 4) has recorded the tradition that St. Patrick obtained for the Irish this privilege, that no Irishman shall be alive during the reign of Antichrist. This serves to explain the expectation that the sea shall cover Ireland seven years before the day of judgment. In the Leabhar

Breac (fol. 14, b.) there is an account of St. Patrick's expulsion of the demons from Ireland, and of the seven requests which he obtained of the Lord. The first three of these were: Cipe do fepairb Epenn do gne aitérigi ne m-bap, cio ppi ne en uairpe, na po h-iaeta ipferno fapir i m-brath; 7 cona po auzpe bas eécpand in mōri; 7 co ti muir tapri .iii. m-bliadna pía m-brat. “Whosoever of the men of Eri repents before death, even the space of one hour, hell shall not be shut on him at the judgment; and foreigners shall not inhabit the island; and the sea shall come over it seven years before the judgment.” It is evident that this last is regarded as a blessing to the Irish, because, by that means, Ireland shall be saved from the persecution of Antichrist.—(T.)

going list; the numbers prefixed denote the order in which they stand in the twenty-eight wonders of which the list given in D. consists.

1. Loch Lein; ceathra chircilla uime .i. circall roan, 7 chircall luagí, 7 chircall iarín, 7 circall uma. "Loch Lein; four circles are round it; viz., a circle of tin, and a circle of lead, and a circle of iron, and a circle of copper." This is the first of the Irish wonders mentioned by Nennius: "Est ibi stagnum quod vocatur Loch Lein, quatuor circulis ambitur. Primo circulo gronna stanni ambitur, secundo circulo gronna plumbi ambitur, tertio circulo gronna ferri, quarto circulo gronna aris ambitur, et in eo stagno multae margaritae inveniuntur, quas ponunt reges in auribus suis." This is the tenth wonder in O'Flaherty's metrical list, Ogyg. p. 291. Loch Lein, now the upper lake of Killarney, but anciently both lakes were regarded as one, and called Loch Lein.

3. Loch Riach dan. Tuairgab ill saéa in gaé lo. "Loch Riach, [now Lough Reagh, near a town of the same name in Galway.] then; it takes many colours every day." This is O'Flaherty's twelfth wonder.

4. Dirna in Dagda don .i. cloch do bepar ar in muir do zaezh fo ceoir co raib for bhu in zobaip ceona. "The Dirna of the Dagda, viz., a stone which is taken out of the sea, it returns immediately, and is found at the brink of the same well." This resembles the third wonder of Man. See above, p. 121. The word Dirna denotes a stone weight.

5. Iubur nic n-Aingeir a n-eap maí; at cirhear a rcazh zup ar in n-uirci co follur 7 ni feczar h-e fein for zup. "The yew tree of the son of Aingeis at Eas Maighe; its shadow is seen below in the water, and it is not seen itself on the land." Eas Maighi is the cataract of the river Maigue, at Cahirass, in the county Limerick. It does not appear who the son of Aingeis was. This is O'Flaherty's eleventh wonder.

13. Tappa pleibe Gamh; ca lan mnzi .i. lan do ral zour, 7 lan o'fuir uirci. "The well of Slieve Gamh; two fulls are in it [i. e. it is full of two things], viz., full of salt sea-water, and full of pure water." The well of Slieve Gamh, or the Ox Mountains, county Sligo, is still well known. O'Flaherty describes it as his fourth wonder.

16. Copp mure geid na h-aeur di o zopach domain can chuip aile rapia. “The crane of Inis Geidh has been alone from the beginning of the world, without any other crane with her.” Inis Geidhe, i. e. Insulæ Sanctæ Gedhiæ, now Inishkea, or Inishgay, is an island about three miles off the coast of Erris. See O’Donovan’s Hy Fiachrach, and Map. Very little is known of the saint who has given her name to the island, but the existence of the lone crane of Inishkea is still firmly believed in by the peasantry. This is O’Flaherty’s sixth wonder.

21. Cianan daimhliag maipig can to-baio can bpenao co na balluib ocaib con far fuile 7 mugean. “Cianan of Daimhliag [Duleek] remains without corruption, without stinking, with his members perfect, and his hair and his nails grow.” This curious tradition is mentioned in the notes to the Felire Aenguis, at the 24th of November; it may, perhaps, be understood as communicating to us the fact that the whole body of the saint was preserved as a relic at Duleek. St. Cianan was one of the earliest Irish Christians, to whom St. Patrick, according to Tighernach, gave his own copy of the Gospels: η οο ευγ Πατριας α πορπελα. He died A. D. 489. Tigern. in anno.—(T.)

^p Duan Eireannach.—I have given the name of Duan Eireannach to this poem, for convenience sake, as it seems of the same nature with the Duan Albannach, which is already known by that name to the students of Irish and Scottish history. Although quoted by O’Flaherty (Ogyg. iii. c. 72), and by Keating, this ancient poem has never been published, and may be said to be unknown to an historian. It is here printed from a very good copy in the Book of Leinster, in the Library of Trin. Coll. (H. 2. 18), compared with two other copies, one in the fragment of the Book of Lecan, which remains in the same Library (H. 2. 18), and the other in a paper MS. in the hand-writing of Tadhg O’Neachtain, also in the Library of Trin. Coll. (H. 1. 15, p. 27), which seems to have been copied from the Book of Leinster. Mr. O’Reilly (Trans. of Gaelic Society, p. lvi.), speaks of “a very fine copy of it”, which was in his own possession; but if he alludes to this it turns out to be only a transcript in his own hand-writing made from the copy in

In the following notes the readings of the Book of Lecan will be distinguished by the letter L., and those of O'Naghten's copy by N.—(T.)

¹ Maelmura of Othain, or of Fathain (the F being aspirated and omitted), now Fahan, near Loch Swilly, in Inishowen, Co. Donegal. See an account of Maelmura in O'Reilly's Irish Writers (Trans. Gaelic Soc., p. lvi.). See also the Four Masters, at the year 884, and the Leabhar Gabhala of the O'Clerys, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, p. 207, where, after mention made of the historical poem written by him for Flann Sionna King of Ireland, his death is thus recorded: Maelmurae p̄ir̄in an f̄ile p̄oir̄icc̄e p̄ireol̄ac̄r̄taip̄id̄e ep̄zna an bepla Scoirecc̄da do ecc ip̄in och̄em̄as bl. do fl̄aith̄ Fl̄oind̄ τ-Sionna 884. "The same Maelmura, a learned, truly-intelligent poet, an historian skilled in the Scottic language, died in the eighth year of the reign of Flann Sionna, A. Whence did the mighty stream^r of ocean Waft them to Eri?

What was the land^s in which they originally lived, 5
Lordly men, Fenians^t?

What brought them, for want of land,
To the setting of the sun?

What was the cause that sent them forth 10
Upon their wanderings?

Was it in flight, or for commerce,
Or from valour^u?

What is the proper name^v for them, 15
As a nation,
By which they were called in their own country?
Scuit or Gaedhil?

Why

In the preceding line, glezeno is rendered battles, on the authority of O'Clery's Glossary, where glezen is explained gleo [battle], and gleo tecann [stern fight]. For canar tapla, line 3, L. reads can doir pala.—(T.)

^s What was the land.—Cepri uppano. L. "what was the division."—(T.)

^t Fenians.—Alluding to the story of Fenius Farsaidh, King of Scythia, and the school of learning established by him under the superintendence of Gaedhal, son of Eathor. See Keating (Haliday's Transl. p. 225), and O'Donovan's Irish Grammar, p. xxviii. sq. Top is a lord, a chief (in the oblique case tauip): tauip-

rep (which in the plural would be better written tauiprip) will therefore signify noble or lord-like men.—(T.)

^u Valour.—"Did they leave their former habitations in flight from their enemies, or for the sake of commerce, or from a spirit of adventure and love of conquest?" L. reads (ciaip tucair in no fogluair), rem iar tauipuil?—(T.)

But if Fenius Farsaidh was the great-grandson of Japhet by Magog, as Mr. O'Flaherty found it (Ogyg. p. 9, 10), and as the Scythian mythus requires, why are Miledh's sons said to be of the Greeks?—(H.) The author of the life of St. Cadroe (Colgan, Acta SS. p. 494) has given a legend of the origin of the Scots, in which they are said to have been a colony from a city called "Choriscon," situated on the river Pactolus, between the regions of Choria [Caria] and Lydia. The inhabitants of this city having discovered the superior fertility of Thrace, set out, "junctis sibi Pergamis et Lacedæmonis," with their wives and property, to take possession of that country, "ut cupitam terram possessuri peterent." They were driven, however, by terrific storms, out of their course, through the Straits of Gibraltar, and then up to Ireland (which the author represents as being then inhabited by Picts—gentem Pietaneorum reperunt). They landed under Cruach an eile, now Cruach Patrick, in Clew Bay, Co. Mayo. They proceeded thence to Clonmacnois, then to Armagh, Kildare, Cork, Bangor, and even to Iona; in short, they obtained possession of the whole island (particularly of its ecclesiastical cities, although so long before Christianity), and they called it first Chorisca, from the name of their native town, and then Scotia, from Scotta, daughter of the king of Egypt, and wife of Niul, son of Æneas (i. e. Fenius), a Lacedemonian, who was one of their leaders. See Colgan's notes, n. 39, 40, ib. 502. The author of the Life of St. Cadroe is supposed by Colgan to have written A. D. 1040. The common story given by Colgan (note 2, ad Vit. S. Abbani, 16 Mart. p. 621) represents the migrations of the Scotie colony to have been from Egypt to Greece, thence to Spain, and thence to Ireland.—(T.) ^d Unto him.—Keating, who quotes v. 41–52 of this poem, omits choice, which occurs in all the other copies : in L. it is written चुका. The omission is necessary to the metre. In line 42, L. reads פור רא רלואיגעו, and Keating פורר אן רלואיגעו, which is also required by the metre. In line 44, for באגאח, warlike, L. and Keating read בואאָאָ, victorious ; and N. בואאָאָ, which is wrong, unless it be intended for בואאָאָ. Dr. Lynch, in his unpublished translation of Keating, a MS. in the possession of Mr. O'Donovan,

“Egressum Scythia Fenius numerosa secuta est.

“Ingressis turrim mortalibus, unica lingua

In line 43, N. and Keating read פּיָוּוּ for פּיָוּוּוּ.—(T.)

number of Noah's sons and their posterities, as enumerated in Gen. x. and 1 Chron. i. is 73, from which arose the number of 72 languages, both among Jews and Christians. Philistim being omitted, as having been introduced parenthetically (Gen. x. 14, 1 Chron. i. 12.), not as one of the original tribes, but in reference to a later subdivision. Peter Comestor, in his Scholastic History, has said, "Texuntur ex eis 72 generationes, 15 de Japhet, 30 de Chem, et 27 de Sem."—fol. xiv. But Vincent of Beauvais mentions both reckonings thus: "Fuerunt ex tribus Noe filiis gentes 73 (vel potius ut ratio declarat 72), scilicet 15 de Japhet, 31 de Cham, et 27 de

This idea is agreeable to the Greek version of Deut. xxxii. 8, "according to the number of the angels of God." The Mahometans likewise adopt the number 72 as that of the nations divided at Babel; and in analogy to that division they boast of their religion being divided into 72 sects, while they allow only 71 to the Christians, and 70 to the

Dr. Lynch paraphrases this stanza thus :

or heroes of dark blue weapons” is possibly a description of the Egyptians; but it may perhaps better be taken in apposition with Nel, as descriptive of his followers; his son Gaedhal is by some said to have been called ἡλαρ, or green, from the colour of his armour (Haliday’s Keating, p. 237); the weapons of the followers of Nel may therefore be here called ῡυρρμ, i. e. dark blue or black, for a similar reason. ἡλαρ denotes weapons, arms; the word is thus explained in a glossary ἡλαρ .i. ἡλαρ .i. ῡῡε η ο αρμα.—(T.)

 Coronis. In the margin, after the word Coronar, the scribe has written n. loci,
 i. e. “nomen loci.” L. reads Corcuir.
 According to the historical poem of Giolla Coemhain, preserved in the Leabhar Gabhala, the descendants of Nel or Niul, after leaving Egypt, remained in Scythia for a considerable time, contending for the sovereignty of the country; but being at length expelled, they formed a settlement on the Caspian Sea, where Agnoman, the seventh in descent from Niul (see Ogy- gia, page 67), died. After remaining there a year they set out again, passed through the Lybian Sea, and Glas, the son of Agnoman, and brother of Lamhfinn and Elloth, died at Coronis. The poet's words (Leabhar Gabhala, p. 61) are as follow :

Rangatar muir Libir lán, peolað re pamlaite plán, Glar mac Agnomain naroir an atbath i Coronar.

“They reached the full Lybian Sea.
 They sailed six full summer days :
 Glas, son of Agnoman the wise.
 Died at Coronis.”

The prose account in the Leabhar Gabh- ala (p. 58), states that their settlement at the Caspian Sea was in an island: that they remained there a year, and on the death of Agnoman set out through the Lybian Sea to an island called Coronis, where Glas, son of Agnoman, died, after they had been there a year. Keating calls this island “Coronia in the Pontic Sea.”

Over the surface¹ of the Caspian sea they passed.

—Haliday's edit. p. 251. The Glas here spoken of, therefore, is not Gadhael Glas, but Glas, son of Agnoman, the eighth in descent from him. Coronis is most probably Cyrene on the Lybian Sea. "Ab ea parte quæ Lybico [mari] adjacet," says Pomponius Mela. "proxima est Nilo provincia quam Cyrenas vocant."—De Situ Orbis, l. i. c. 7. And his annotator, Joh. Olivarius, adds. "nunc dicta Corena."—See also Herodotus, l. iii. and iv.—(T.)

¹ Sru, son of Esru.—Sru, son of Asruth, was the grandson of Gadheal Glas, and the leader of the descendants of Niul in the expedition from Egypt to Scythia. But if the preceding stanza relates to the death of Glas or Lamhglas (as Keating calls him), who was the sixth in descent from Sru, it is evident that there has been some confusion or transposition. The error, however, occurs in all the copies of this poem

³ Golgatha.—Θολγοθαμ, L. Θολγο-οθα, N. O'Flaherty calls it ῥαετλιγθε, on the authority of the poem of Giolla Coemhan already referred to (Leabhar Gabhala, p. 60). The prose account, ib. p. 59, gives it the same name: cf. v. 117. It is very doubtful what place is intended by this appellation: some suggest Gothia (Keating, p. 251), others Galatia, but O'Flaherty prefers Getulia (Ogyg. pp. 66, 67). This stanza is probably a continuation of the adventures, not of the original expedition under Sru, but of that under Lamhfinn and Elloth, the brothers of Glas, son of Agnoman, who died at Coronis. According to Keating (p. 247, Haliday), Sru and his followers went no farther than Crete, where he left a colony and died. But the account given in the Leabhar Gabhala makes him pass down the Red Sea, into the Ocean, by the island of Taprabana [Ceylon], the Riphæan mountains, and so to Scythia.—(T.)

Slieve Riffi (line 108) is Mount Rhiphæus in Scythia, now called the Ural mountains, which the Irish antiquaries undoubtedly connected with the name of Riphath, grandson of Japhet, Gen. x. 3. Josephus, however (i. c. 6), says, Ῥιφάθης ἐὶ Ῥιφαθαίους, τοὺς Παφλαγόνους λεγομένους.—(H.)

^e Deed.—L. reads comæen n-γρηανδα. N. has θα ceτ γρηανδα, which is an evident mistake. Authorities differ as to the number of years that the posterity of Lamhfinn remained in Gaethluighe. The old copies of the poem of Giolla Coemhain read thirty (see Haliday's Keating, p. 251; Ogyg. p. 72), but the O'Clerys, in their copy of this poem in the Leabhar Gabhala (p. 62), have 300. Keating, (loc. cit.), prefers 150, on the ground that Brath, the leader of the expedition from Gaethluighe to Spain, was the ninth in descent from Lamhfinn, who first settled at Gaethluighe. But this would be allowing less than twenty years to a generation. Our author assigns 200 years to this interval,—another proof that this stanza describes the adventures of Lamhfinn, not of Sru son of Esru, and that some stanzas are probably lost. O'Flaherty adopts the term of 500 years, and points out the source of the difficulty in the legend, that Niul, or Nel, son of Fenius Farsaidh, was contemporary with Moses, which he could not be without extreme longevity, as the genealogies make him only the fifth in descent from Noah; Ogyg. p. 72. O'Flaherty, therefore, places the settlement of Lamhfinn at Getulia, about the year A. M. 2245 (i. e. about 200 years before Moses), and the expedition of Brath from Getulia to Spain about A. M. 2767.—Ogyg. p. 82.—(T.)

^f Brath.—This stanza and the next are added from L. They do not occur in the other MSS. Brath, son of Deagath or Deagfath, as Keating calls him (see also line 125), was the leader of the migration from Gaethluighe into Spain, about the time of the destruction of Troy: Ogyg. p. 82. He was the nineteenth in descent from Fenius. The course here assigned to Brath is northwards, which is scarcely consistent with any of the opinions on the situation of Gaethluighe with respect to Spain.—(T.)

ⁱ Creid, i. e., They sailed by Crete and Sicily, through the Straits of Gibraltar, to Spain. Immediately after this stanza the Book of Leinster gives the stanza beginning Ḵa mbrennraēt oo palā, which it repeats again (lines 137-140). N. gives ρεὶς colomna hērcul atbul

it here, but does not repeat it in the second place. It is evidently misplaced here, and has therefore been omitted.—(T.)

^j Peninsular.—The word molib is perhaps from mōe, a point. And if so, it will signify here “Spain the pointed,” that is, running out into a point, peninsular. It might signify also herds of cattle, and then the meaning would be “Spain rich in cattle,” which might perhaps allude to the classical fable of Hercules seizing the cattle of Geryon. But this latter translation is not so probable as the former.—(T.)

^k Deatha.—The father of Brath, who was mentioned before under the name of Deagath, which is only a different spelling. See line 113, and note. This passage is very corrupt in all the copies. L. reads hua θεαθα οη ριγματο. N. has υαθε ατα ριατο don ροζρητο. The meaning, however, is evidently what I have given in the translation, although I cannot alto-

ⁿ Brigantia.—The Flavium Brigantium of antiquity is the port of Betanzos in Spanish Galicia; and it would have been as completely unknown in Ireland as any other port in Spain, but for a passage in the first Book of Orosius, copied into the third of those geographical epitomes, which usually bear the name of Æthicus Ister: “Secundus angulus circium inten-dit ubi Brigantia Calleciae civitas sita, altissimum pharum, et inter pauca memorandi operis, ad speculum Britanniae erigitur.”—Oros. p. 26, Æthic. p. 61. Ed. Gronovii. The farum, or pharos, light-house, is the Tower of Breagon (v. 131), and the words “ad speculum” gave rise to the absurd notion that Ireland was visible from Betanzos. They were probably written when those who did not wish to be burned in their beds kept a sharp look out for vessels from Britain. However, the story hath its foundation in the cited passage of Orosius, and in one subsequent, which mentions Ireland, and is as follows: “Hibernia insula, inter Britanniam et Hispaniam sita, longiore, ab Africo in boream, spatio porrigitur. Hujus partes priores intentæ Cantabrico oceano Brigantiam Calleciae civitatem, ab Africo sibi in circium occurrentem, spatio intervallo procul spectant; ab eo præcipuè promontorio, ubi Scenæ [Shannon] fluminis ostium est, et Velabri Lucenique consistunt.”—p. 28. Havercamp.

Observe the progress of falsehood. This excellent writer simply says spectant, the shores of south-west Ireland looked or faced in that direction; and states (perhaps falsely, but possibly with truth), that the tower of Betanzos was erected for the purpose of watching these islands, “ad speculum Britanniae”; and hence, we are told by Malmura, that “Erin was seen from the Tower.” Being discovered on a winter’s evening, it would seem to have been peculiarly visible in the dark.

The Brigantes were, perhaps, the greatest of the tribes or nations inhabiting Britain; and their country reached from shore to shore, from the mouth of the Humber or Trent, to that of the Eden. Therefore, if the names Breagon and Brigant could be shewn identical (which they cannot), it would be sufficiently apparent from whence the former came into Ireland.—(II.)

Keating, p. 267. Leabhar Gabhala, p. 70. This latter account appears to be adopted by our author. Where Slemnaibh is I do not know; but the scribe has added, no. loci, i. e. nomen loci. ^u Wide-ruling.—The word ɛ́pɛ́c has here evidently the signification of endowed with lands, wide-ruling; in which sense it is applied as a surname to Aongus Tirech, King of Munster, so called because he was fabled to have made extensive conquests in Europe. Book of Munster (MS. Royal Irish Academy), p. 32.—(T.)

^v Descendants.—The MS. reads bui,

- Donn, Colptha, Amergin of the white knee, 145
 A hero mighty, wide-ruling^u;
 Ir and Eber, Herimon,
 The six sons of Miledh.
- The son of Ith, Lugaid, the fair, the plundering, Victorious, warlike, 150
 Over the wide sea passed
 To avenge his father.
- The descendants^v of Breogan, ardent, vigorous,
 As we enumerated them,
 Blod, Corp, Cualgne, Righbhard, 155
 Tighern, son of Brig.
- There were also four and twenty plebeians^x,
 Who were not proud,
 To attend on the chiefs without fail
 In the expedition. 160
- I shall recite unto you all their names,
 As I have^y received them,
 After their enumeration; there were two of them
 In attendance on each chieftain.

which is also followed by N., but L. reads heu. I have ventured to translate as if the reading was hut, the descendants, grandsons, posterity, a conjectural emendation suggested by Mr. O'Donovan, which seems necessary for the sense. The adjectives βρυσμαρα and βεοδα, being plural, require a plural substantive. For βεοδα L. reads φηρ. Bile, the father of Milesius, was the son of Breogan. Ith was also the son of Breogan. Therefore, Lugaid was grandson, and all the others mentioned in the text, great-grandsons of Breogan.—(T.)

Other variations occur in the list given by Keating, p. 307, who makes the number of chieftains much more than twelve, and says nothing of two servants being assigned to each. Forty-one names are given in the poetical list of the chieftains enumerated in the verses beginning Coirpigh na loingri tap lep, “The chieftains of the ships over the sea,” attributed to Eochy O’Flynn, and preserved in the Leabhar Gabhala of the O’Clerys, p. 71; and O’Flaherty says, “Duces principui Hibernicæ expeditionis erant numero quadraginti.”—Ogyg. iii. c. 4, p. 182.—(T.)

Our author seems to intimate here that they were taken by force. Comp. lines 215–218. Tea, wife of Herimon was daughter of Lughadh, son of Ith.—(T.) I may snatch occasion to note here, what I ought to have said Addit. Notes, line 19, page xli. Old Layamon the meaning seems to be, either that the Picts had to sustain great labours and contests in order to obtain their wives; or that, after obtaining them, they had to endure great labour before they acquired a permanent settlement. See Add. Notes, p. lxx., and Keating (Halliday's ed.), p. 317.—(T.)

^d Banba.—This quatrain is quoted by Keating, p. 288. Banba, Fothla, and Eire, were the three queens of the Tuatha De Danaan, wives of the sons of Carmad, who held the sovereignty of Ireland on the arrival of the Milesians. Sliabh Mis, which still retains its name, is a mountain south-west of Tralee, in the county of Kerry. Sliabh Ebhline, now Sleibhte

Ebhline, is a range of mountains beginning in the barony of Ownybeg and Coonagh, in the county of Limerick, and extending in the direction of Nenagh and Cashel, in the county of Tipperary. Uisneach, or Usnagh, is a hill still bearing the name, about four miles from Ballymore Lough Sewdy, in the county of Westmeath. In line 184. L. reads pepech tuirleao. N. reads rriucé tuirleac (a mistake, probably, for tuirleac) and Keating (in Halliday's edit.), peiepeac, tuirleac. These differences are merely differences of spelling.—(T.)

With the wife of Bress, the wife of Bass,
And the wife of Buaighne.

They fought Banba^d at Slicbh Mis with her hosts, 185
Faint, wearied;
They fought Fothla at Ebhlinne, murmuring, Eire at Uisneach.

The Tuatha Dea sent them^e forth,
According to the laws of war^f, 190
From the firm land over nine waves
Of the broad sea.

Herimon went^g forth with half the host
In proud array,

^f Laws of war.—The story here alluded to is given by Keating, p. 291. The Milesians demanded a settlement in the country, or a battle. The Tuatha De Danaan offered to leave the decision of this question to the Milesian judge, Amergin, who was bound to give judgment according to law. He decided against his own brethren; but enjoined that the Milesians should re-embark, and go to sea, a distance of nine waves, and that then, if they could effect a landing against the forces of the Tuatha De Danaan, the country should be their's. This was agreed to by both sides. The words in which Amergin is said to have pronounced his judgment are preserved in the Leabhar Gabhala of the O'Clerys, p. 72, where they are interpreted by a copious gloss, being in an ancient and nearly obsolete dialect of Irish.—(T.)

^g Went.—L. reads λυρο: and in the next line ιαρ τυμο τολεδα, "upon the proud waves." In line 193 the same MS. has τινχεαλλ αν τυατο βαν καν μεργα.—(T.)

^h Inbher Colptha.—The bay of Colpa, son of Milesius, who was drowned there: Keating, p. 293. This is the name still given

ⁱ Without strength.—Cen tungair, L. For the story of Donn's shipwreck see Keating, p. 293.—(T.)

^j Irrus.—From this it appears that the south-western promontory of Kerry was anciently called Irrus, or the western promontory, for it was there that the shipwreck, according to all tradition, took place.—(T.)

^k Tech Duinn, or the House of Donn. See above, p. 56, note ^m. It would be very desirable to ascertain whether the islands at the mouth of Kenmare river, one of which is now identified by tradition with Tech Duinn, contain carus, or other traces of a pagan burying ground. From their inaccessible situation it is not likely that any rude monuments they may contain have been much disturbed. The words "stone of his race" probably allude to a custom of later date, when an inscribed stone, marking the name, family, or rank of the deceased, was placed over his grave. For co tuarcbad, line 199, L. reads ap

Donn went with the other half island called Tech Duinn was believed to be the burial place of Donn's posterity. I am not aware that it has ever been examined by any competent antiquary, with a view to test this tradition.—(T.)

^m Inbher Scene, the mouth of the river of Amergin, who was there drowned. See logies (Marquis of Drogheda's copy),

 p. 45. Inbher Skene was the ancient name of the mouth of the river Corrane, in the Co. Kerry.—(T.)

 death of Fial, who was the daughter of Milesius and wife of Lughad, son of Ith, is given in the Leabhar Gabhala, p. 74:

 the Milesians landed in Eri, that Loch Luighdheach [in Kerry] broke out of son of Ith, was bathing in the lake, and Fial, daughter of Miledh, his wife, was with him bathing in the river that runs out of the lake. Lughaidh came on shore where the woman was naked, and she thought it was another man, and died of shame immediately. And from her the river and its mouth have their name." Then follows, in the Leabhar Gabhala, a poem, said to have been composed by Lughaidh on the occasion. See Keating (Haliday's Edit.) p. 96.—(T.)

 count, the Milesians formed alliances with all the tribes in possession of the country.
 This fact, which, if true, would account for

They spread themselves through Eri, to her coasts,
 As is recorded,

the difference of race so manifest in the mere Irish population, is not mentioned by Keating or other popular historians. L. reads in v. 216, CIA PO NGLEA; and for ap HΓAIT, in the next line, CAPIOΓAPE.—(T.)

cona cholach, cona oligeao. After line 224, there is an omission in N. of eighty-eight lines. All the ancient Irish writers agree that Herimon possessed the northern, and Heber the southern parts of Ireland, and yet Giraldus Cambrensis reverses this division in his Topographia Hiber. D. III. c. 6. Camd. p. 737: “Procedente vero tempore duo istorum nominatissimi Hibernis scilicet et Herymon duas in partes æquales, regnum inter se diviserunt. Herymoni cessit pars Australis: Hebero quidem Aquilonaris.” To this day, however, the people of Munster

^r Fortresses.—Here again in the text we have cona nduinib, “with their fortresses,” which is inconsistent with the context, and ought to be con a dúinib. L. reads:

 Cona zheirpéich tria orni con a eirpi.

“With its pride, with its wars,
 With its shouts of distress,
 With its failures from its rashness,

^s Power.—The MS. here reads con éommur, but the context shows that the scribe intended to write cona, and I have altered it accordingly. L. reads cen cho-mar, “without power.”—(T.)

^t Harmony.—Alluding, perhaps, to the legend, which will be found in Keating, p. 306, of Cir, son of Cis, the poet, having been allotted to Herimon, and Onee, the harper, to Heber.—(T.)

^x Lagenians, i. e. the families of Leinster. Ugainé Mor, king of Ireland, whose reign commenced, according to O’Flaherty, A. M. 3619, was a lineal descendant of Herimon; and to his son, Laeghaire Lorc, are traced the O’Conors of Offaly, O’Tooles, O’Byrnes, Mac Murrroughs, Mac Gillpatrick’s, and all the great families of Leinster. Ugainé is also the ancestor of Con of the Hundred Battles, and of all the septs called Hy Niall, seated in Meath and Ulster; also of the families of Leath Cuinn, or the northern half of Ireland, with the exception of the Clanna Rudhraighe, and some minor families. The great families of Connaught also, as the O’Conors, O’Flahertys, O’Dowdas, O’Heynes, O’Shaughnessys, &c., who are chiefly of the race of Eochaidh Muighmeadhoin, and therefore belong to the family of Ugainé Mor, and the line of Herimon.—(T.)

^z The Fotharts.—These were the descendants of Eochaidh Finn Fothart, son of Fedhlimidh Reachtmar, King of Ireland, A. D. 164. He was banished from Meath, then the seat of the kings, by his nephew, Art Aenair, who began his reign, according to O'Flaherty, A. D. 220.—Ogyg. iii. c. 64. The posterity of Eochaidh Finn Fothart settled in various parts of Leinster, and the baronies of Fothart or Forth, in the counties of Carlow and Wexford, still retain their name. The Deisi were the descendants of Fiacha Suighdhe, son of Fedhlimidh Reachtmar, and were, therefore, of the senior line of Ugainé Mor. But they were set aside by Con of the Hundred Battles, and afterwards expelled from Meath by Cormac O'Cuinn, his grandson, who began his reign A. D. 254.—Ogyg. iii. c. 69. They settled in the district now called from them Decies, in the County Waterford, and in the barony of

Middlethird, County Tipperary.—(T.)

^a Mogh Lamha's race.—Mogh Lamha was the father of Conaire II., King of Ireland, A. D. 212, who married Saraid, daughter of Con of the Hundred Battles, and was the father of the three Cairbres, from one of whom, Cairbre Riada, or Rioghfhada, the Dal-Riada, or race of Riada, are descended. The district of Dalriada, now called the Rout, in the county Antrim, takes its name from the race that inhabited it. See Reeves's Ecl. Antiq. of Down, and Connor, and Dromore, note FF. p. 318, et seq. The genealogy of Mogh Lamha is thus given in the Book of Conquests, p. 147: He was the son of Lughaidh Alladham, King of Munster, son of Coirpre Crimchuin, son of Daire Dornmhair, son of Cairpre Fionnmhor, King of Munster, son of Conaire Mor, King of Ireland.—(T.)

^b Cualgne.—For la cup Cualḡne, L. reads la copc ḡaela. Cualgne is a mountainous district in the north of the county of Louth, now Cooley; the celebrated Cuchullin, of the race of Heri-

mon, was the champion of Cualgne, and perhaps he is here particularly alluded to. Corc Gaela, mentioned in the reading of L., was king of the country now called Eile, or Ely, in Ormond. He was married to Ele, daughter of Eochaidh Mac Luchta, and his descendants were the Corco Gaela. The three Fotharts were his chief representatives, through their mother Finche.—(T.)

^c Corco-Rinne.—L. reads corco churann; but I know not who were the Corco Rinne, or Corco Churann. There is probably some corruption of the text in all the copies.—(T.)

^d Corco-Roeda.—These were the descendants of Fiacha Raide, son of Fiacha Suighdhe, already mentioned as the ancestor of the Deisi. The Corcoraidians occupied the barony of Corcaree in the county of Westmeath.—Ogyg. iii. c. 69.—(T.)

^e Eochaidh Doimhlen.—He was the son of Cairbre Liffeachar, King of Ireland, and father of Colla Huais, King of Ireland.—Ogyg. iii. c. 75. L. omits uilí in line 247, which is evidently redundant: and in the next line the same manuscript reads τυρ οια ρηλαβ. He is called “a pillar of his houses,” i. e. of the houses or families descended from him, because he was the common ancestor of the O’Kellys of Hy-Many, Maguires, Mac Mahons of Oriel, O’Hanlons, &c.—(T.)

^f Kings of Argiall.—L. has simply na h-Argialla, the Argialla. They were the descendants of the three Collas, the sons of Eochaidh Doimhlen.—Ogyg. iii. c. 76.—(T.)

From Buichne to Loch Febhail.—L. reads οχα θυαιονιχ. The meaning is, that the authority of the Argialla extended over the district, from the River Buichne to Loch Febhail or Foyle. In St. Patrick’s time the Argialla had possession of all the country about Loch Foyle and the now counties of Monaghan, Armagh, a great part of Tyrone, and of the barony of Slane in Meath. Where the Buichne is I do not know, but it appears to be the name of a river.—(T.)

See O'Donovan's Genealogies, Tribes, &c., of Hy-Many, pp. 7, 10, 25, 66, 130, 134. For Կօրաւ, in line 251, L. reads Կօրաւ, and in the next line Կոնաւ նոմար. In line 253 the words յեջ մեւ are omitted.—(T.)

ⁱ Greyness.—The word Կօմն is inserted from L., and is necessary to complete the metre; it signifies, literally, half black.—(T.)

^k Fothads.—The three Fothads were the sons of Lugadh Mac Con, King of Ireland A. D. 250, according to O'Flaherty's dates. They were called Fothad Airgtheach, Fothad Cairptheach, and Fothad Canann.—

Ogyg. p. 329. The names Aendia, Trennia, and Coennia, lines 257, 258, are other names given to the three Fothads, Airgtheach, Cairptheach, and Canann.—(T.)

Cairpri Arad, Arad Thire, and Arad Cliach or Cliathach, are the tribes settled in Duharra, and the adjacent territory in Tipperary.—See O'Donovan's Book of Rights, published by the Celtic Society, p. 46. n.—(T.)

^m Latharn.—The district of Larne, Co. Antrim, in the ancient territory of Dalarradia, which derives its name from Lathair, one of the sons of Ugaine Mor. The Benntraighe are the descendants of Beann, son of Connor Mac Nessa, according to some accounts; or of Conganenis, of the Erneans of Munster, according to others. See M'Firbis, pp. 381, 503. They were settled at Bantry Bay in the county Cork, and also at Bantry, on the borders of the counties of Wicklow and Wexford. The Ionmanaich were descended from Colla Meann in Mughdhorne.—Book of Leacan, fol. 88. b, b.—(T.)

ⁿ Dal Finn Fiatach.—The descendants of Fiatach Finn, who, according to Tighernach, began to reign in Emania, as King of Uladh or Ulidia, in the year A.D. 108, and in 116, according to O'Flaherty's Chronology, became king of Ireland.—Ogyg. p. 142, and p. 301. He was of the race of Herimon, of the family of the Ernai, or descendants of Oilíoll Aroun, who settled in Ulster.—Ogyg. p. 266.—(T.)

^o Corpraighe.—Over the word Κορρρε in the text, the MS. has the correction no Κορρραγε in a later hand; and over Τρατραιγε, the correction no Θαρτραιγε, which have been adopted in the translation. L. reads φοδλα Κορρραυοι ρεο Θαρτραυοι, and in the next line τοιρη θηεοχ. The Corpraighe are the descendants of Carbre Liffeachar, son of Cormac Mac Art, King of Ireland, A. D. 279.—Ogyg. p. 341. The Dartraighe were a tribe situated near Loch Gill, in the barony of Carbery, Co. Sligo, descended from Lugad Cal, of the family of Ith. Ogyg. p. 329.—(T.)

where the Eoghanachts are to be found, of which the poet proceeds to enumerate the principal. The Eoghanachts were the descendants of Eoghan, son of Óilioll Olum, King of Munster, A. D. 237.—Ogyg. p. 326. There were various septs of them in the south of Ireland, as the Eoghanacht Ani, or O'Ciermeics, at Ani, now Knockany, in the Co. Limerick; the Eoghanacht Locha Lein, or O'Donohues, at Loch Lein, now the Lake of Killarney, barony of Magunihy, Co. Kerry; the Eoghanacht Caisil, or Mac Carthys, of Cashel; the Eoghanacht Ruis-airgid, near the river Nore in Ossory; Eoghanacht Rathlenn, or O'Mahonys, in the barony

The MS. reads cloenoubcay in line 269, for which the reading of L. has been adopted in the text, as being more correct.—(T.)

^a Eochaidh of Raithlinne: i. e. the Eoghanachts of Rathlenn, or O'Mahonys. See last note.—(T.)

^s Dal Cais.—The posterity of Cais, son of Conall Eachluadh, King of Munster, in the fourth century.—Ogyg. p. 386. The title of Dal Cais was given to the inhabitants of Thomond, including the great families of O'Brien, Mac Namara, Mac Mahon, O'Curry, &c. The Dal Cein or Cianachts, are the posterity of Cian, son of Oilioll Olum (Ogyg. p. 328), including the families now known by the surnames of O'Carroll (of Ely), O'Meagher (of Ikerin, Tipperary), O'Conor (of Glengiven, Co. Londonderry), O'Hara and O'Gara, in the diocese of Achonry, Mac Cormac of Bregia, &c. For oal cem L. reads cen-

¹ Dal Mogha.—The race of Mogh Nuadhath, or Eogan More, father of Oilíoll Olum. The Dal Ceata are unknown, but the Dal Core are probably the descendants of Core mac Lughach, Prince of Munster, the reputed ancestor of the Stewards of Scotland; of the Eoganacht of Loch Lein; and of the Cuirene, in Westmeath.—Mac Firbis, p. 165.—(T.)

² Galengs.—The Galengs were a branch of the Dal Cein (Ogyg. p. 328), comprising the O'Haras, O'Garas, O'Catheis, and O'Henessys, in Connaught and Meath. They were descended from Cormac Galengach, great-grandson of Oilíoll Olum, King of Munster. The MS. reads in line 278 Ἰαλινῖο Ἰελβνα, but the reading of L. has been substituted as more correct. The Delbhna were a branch of the Dal-Cais, descended from Lugadh Dealbhadh, son of Cas. To this tribe belong the families of Coghlan of Garrycastle, King's County;

Mac Conry (anglicized King) of Conne-mara; O'Finnellan of Delvin, in Westmeath, &c. From the different branches of this tribe seven different districts or baronies take the name of Delvin.—Ogyg. p. 327.—(T.)

³ Tratraighe.—L. reads Ἰατρααῖοι. The Tratraighe were seated in the rural deanery of Tradry, in the barony of Bunratty, Co. Clare. They were of the Firbolg, but the territory became the inheritance of Lugaidh Dealbhaith, who was driven out of it by the intrigues of his daughter, and forced to fly into Meath. It is also stated that Trad was the name of his daughter's husband, and hence Tradraighe.—M'Firbis, pp. 59, 654.—(T.)

⁴ The Luighni.—These were a branch of the Gailenga (Ogyg. p. 328), and gave their name to the barony of Luighne (Leyny), in the Co. Sligo, and to the barony of Luighne (Lune), in the Co. Meath.—(T.)

^a Mogh Nuadhait.—The father of Oilioll Olun, and head of all the race of Heber. He compelled Con of the Hundred Battles to divide Ireland with him, from which the southern half of Ireland was called Leath Mogha, or Mogha's half.—Ogyg. p. 315.—(T.)

^b Lugaid son of Ith.—Our author having mentioned the principal septs descended from Herimon and Heber, the sons of Milesius, now proceeds to celebrate the race of Lugaid, son of Ith, who was the leader and instigator of the Milesian invasion. His posterity were settled in the diocese of Ross, south-west of the county Cork; but the principal family of the race now extant is that known by the name of O'Hedersceol or O'Driscoll. O'Flaherty says that the family of Mac Cathlin, now Campbell, of Argyle, in Scotland, is of this race, being descended from Fothadh Conann, son of Lughadh Mac Con, King of Ireland.—Ogyg. pp. 329, 330. There is a curious historical tract on the history of the race of Lughaidh Mac Ith, in the Book of Leacan, fol. 122, which is well worthy of publication, for the valuable light it throws on the topography and history of a part of Ireland hitherto very little known. The word nuall, line 283, has been translated fame; it signifies literally a shout, and metaphorically may be taken to denote fame or celebrity. In the Feilire Aenguis (1 Feb.), St. Bridget is called Ὀριγιὸν βαν βάλκε νουάλλαν, “Bridget, a woman of great shouting;” and the gloss says: .i. nuall ann, no nuall an, no uapal, no nuall an .i. ip mop, 7 ip an nuall cauch ocuinchio ierge for Ὀριγιε. No ip mop nuall celebratha oc Ὀριγιε, 7c; i. e. “nuall ann, a shout there; or

^d Bascan.—The Ernai, Arbhraighe, [Orbhraigh or Orrery, Co. Cork], Musca (Muscraighe), and Bascan, are tribes of the race of Herimon, according to the common account. But the Book of Lecan states that by some they are deduced from Ir, son of Ith, fol. 112, b. L. reads in the next line na τῖρῖ λυγαιῶ. At line 286 the copy in the book of Leacan ends, but a column was left blank for the continuation, which is now filled with other matter in a later hand.—(T.)

^e Lugaidh Oirethe.—Lughaid Oirethe, from whom descended the Corco Oirethe; Lughaid Cal, from whom the inhabitants of the district of Calry, of Loch Gill, barony of Carbery, Co. Sligo; and Lugaidh Laighde, the grandfather of Lughaid Mac Con, King of Ireland (from whom came the Corco Laighde, in the west of the Co. Cork), were all sons of Daire, of the race of Ith.—Ogyg. p. 329.—(T.)

^h Dun-Kermna.—A fortress at the foot of the Old Head of Kinsale, called in the 17th century, Dun Patrick, from one of the De Coureys, to whom the district belonged.—Ogyg. p. 205; Keating, in the reign of Cearmna. It had its old name of Dun Kermna, from Cearmna, king of the southern half of Ireland, who began to reign conjointly with Sobhairce, both of the race of Ir, in the year A. M. 3045, according to O'Flaherty. Our author differs from the best authorities, if we are to understand him as deducing these families from Lughad, son of Ith. For the Ernai of middle Munster were descended from Cathaoir, son of Edirscol, King of Ireland; and the Ernai of Dun-Kermna, in South Munster, from Duibhne, son of the same Cathaoir, from whom their posterity were called Corco-Duibhni. They were, therefore, of the race of Herimon. —Ogyg. p. 271.—(T.)

ⁱ Berre.—Now Bearhaven, Co. Cork.—(T.)

^k Midir.—There is probably some mistake of transcription in this name, for it does not occur in the genealogies of the race of Ir. Rudhraighe, ancestor of the Clanna Rudraighe, of the race of Ir, was King of Ireland, according to O'Flaherty. A. M. 3845 (Ogyg. p. 265); and Fachtna Fathach, or the Provident, son of Cas, and grandson of Rudhraighe, succeeded to the throne, A. M., 3899 (ib. p. 266).—(T.)

^l Foot-soldiers, or kernes.—For CIAP α ceizepην, we should probably read CIAP conα ceizepην. The last word of this line ought, perhaps, to be copc, for Ciar, Core, and Conmac, were the illegitimate sons of Fergus Mac Roigh, ex-King of Ulster, of the race of Ir, by Meadhbh, Queen of Connaught (Ogyg. iii. c. 46). Ciar was ancestor of all the tribes called Ciar-

See O'Donovan's Hy Fiachrach, p. 484, and map. Conmac was the ancestor of the people called Conmaicne, as the Conmaicne of Moyrein, in the counties of Longford and Leitrim, of whom the O'Farrells and Mac Rannalls are the principal remaining families; the Conmaicne of Kinel Dubhan, or Dunmore, Co. Galway; Conmacne Mara, now Connemara; and Conmaicne Tola, barony of Kilmaine, Co. Mayo.—O'Flaherty's West Connaught, pp. 92-94. The third son, Corc, was the ancestor of the Corco-modhruidh, or Corcumruaidh, mentioned line 298, in the barony of Corcomroe, which was originally co-extensive with the diocese of Kilfenora, Co. Clare. The O'Loghlinns of Burren, and the O'Conor Corcomroe, are the principal families of this race now remaining.—Ogyg. pp. 275, 276.—(T.)

ⁿ Corca Dallan.—The posterity of Dallan, son of Fergus Mac Roigh, ex-King of Ulster. The Corca-Eoluim, or Corca-Auluim, were the descendants of Aulain, or Corb-Aulain, twin brother of Conri, son of Fergus Mac Roigh.—Ogyg. p. 274.—(T.)

^o Dal m-Buain, or Dal m-Buinne, were the descendants of Buain, son of Fergus Mac Roigh. Their territory comprised the barony of Upper Massareene, Co. Antrim, with the parishes of Kilwarlin and Drumbo. Reeves's Eccl. Antiq. p. 233, note ¹, p. 364. Ogyg. 274. Dal Confinn were the descendants of Aongus Finn, son of Fergus mac Roigh; they were the inhabitants of Coolavin, in the county of Sligo. Ogyg. p. 275.—(T.)

^o Mogh Roith.—A celebrated Druid of the race of the Ciarraige. His posterity obtained the territory of Fermoy. Co. Cork; from him were descended the families of O'Dubhagain or O'Duggan, and O'Cosraigh; also the saints Mochuille and Molagga, and Cuanna MacCailchinne, chief of Fermoy, celebrated for his hospitality, who flourished in the seventh century. See Keating, in the reign of Conall Caol and Cellach; Colgan, in Vit. S. Molaggæ, ad 20 Jan. All the foregoing tribes and personages (mentioned lines 295 to 301) are here said to be of the race of Fergus Mac Roigh [so called from his mother's name], who was the son of Ross Ruadh, son of Rudhruighe, King of Ireland, A.M. 3845.—Ogyg. p. 265. Mogh Roith is called protector from his having, by his magic, assisted the Munster men to defeat Cormac Mac Art, at the battle of Damhdhaire, in the second century. Dudley Mac Firbis translates the name of Mogh Roth, Magus

Rota, and says that he assisted Simon Magus, to make the Roth-ramhach, a magical wheel, by means of which Simon was enabled to ascend into the air, and which is to overwhelm all Europe in some fatal calamity before the day of judgment. See this strange legend in D. Mac Firbis, p. 535 (MS. in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy), and Book of Leacan, fol. 133.—(T.)

about A. D. 90, by the eruption of the lake, now called from his name, Loch n-Eochadh, or Loch Neagh, which over-spread the plain before called Liathmhuine. The ancient name of Lough Neagh was Linnmhuine. He is called "the rebellious son" because he eloped with his step-mother. There is some confusion in lines 317 and 318; perhaps we should read, οια m-βορβ α λινομυμε λινογλαν,

 υπαρ λιαεμυμε λαομορεε.

Who was overwhelmed in clear Linnmhuine,

^z Righbard, son of Brige.—Who this was I do not know. The Core-Oiche were the descendants of Dubhthach Daelteingaidh (i. e. of the black tongue), and are said to have occupied the land now covered by Lough Neagh, until they were dispossessed and dispersed into Meath, Munster, &c., by Eochaidh Mac Mairedha, a Munster chieftain, in the first century,

It would seem, however, that, instead of Se, we should read την τριβην, "three tribes," &c., in line 323; for three only are mentioned, and Keating speaks of three only, enumerating the very same three that are here given, all of whom he says were of the race of the Firbolgs. Α δε τριβη δρονη ηε Σεανκυρ ζυραβ διοβ να την η-αιριεαδα πο φιλ α η-Ειρηνη, ναδ οο γασοδιολαβ .η. Ζαβριουε Shucca α γ-Connacetaib, Ui Tapriyγ α ζεριε ο βββαλζε, η Ζαλιουμ Ζαιγιον. "Some antiquaries say that it is of them [viz. of the Firbolgs] are descended the three families that are in Ireland who are not of the Gadelians, viz., the Gabraidhe of [the river] Suck in Conacht, the Ui Tairsigh, in the country of Offaly, and the Gaileons of Leinster."—Quoted from Dudley Mac Firbis's MS. Comp. Haliday's ed. p. 195; O'Flaherty, Ogyg. p. 175; O'Donovan's Hy-Many, pp. 85, 86, 90. The hint thrown out in the passage quoted from Mr. Mason's MS., that the three non-Gadelian families were of the Athachtuaidh, and therefore joined with the insurgents who murdered the nobles of the Gadelian race, and set up a new line of popularly elected kings, is curious. See Ogyg. iii. c. 54, and Keating, at the reign of Tuathal Teachtmair. Breoghan being the common ancestor of all the Gadelian leaders, to say that the tribes enumerated were not of the race of Breoghan is equivalent to saying that they were not Gadelian. —(T.)

^b Their origin.—Mr. Curry has suggested that the first line of this poem ought to be written Can a mbunadur na nðae-oil, “Whence their origin [viz. the origin] of the Gadelians?” which would make a good sense, and would coincide with the last line, as is usual in bardic compositions of this nature; and although there is a seeming grammatical irregularity in repeating the possessive pronoun along with the noun to which it refers, yet instances are not uncommon in Irish of this sort of redundancy. In the last line of the poem it is quite impossible to take canam as a verb, for it would be the future tense, and would make no sense. But O’Flaherty, Lynch, Keating, and others, the best scholars of the seventeenth century, have taken it as a verb in the first line. Still Mr. Curry’s conjecture is very ingenious, and may probably be true.—

^c Duan Albanach.—The author of the following poem is unknown, but it appears from internal evidence to have been written about A.D. 1057. It is acknowledged on all hands to be of the utmost value, as the connecting link in the history of the Gaels of Ireland and Scotland. Colgan says of it, “quo ego non legi, nec Scoto-Britanni

DUAN ALBANACH^c.

OF the Dalriadans, of whom we have lately spoken^d, we have no doubt of the truth of the little we have attempted of their origin and genealogy in this book. We set down, however, here an ancient poem of the history of the Kings of Scotland.

Thus it speaks, although it is defective^e in counting the kings in the last quatrain, and according to other accounts :

O all

productum, ullum Regum Scotorum vestustiore Scriptorem.” O’Flaherty says the same thing, Ogyg. p. 466; and Pinkerton calls it, “beyond question the most ancient monument of Dalriadic history extant.” See the testimonies collected by Dr. O’Conor, Rer. Hib. Script., tom. i. Proleg. p. cxxii.

It is here edited from the MS. of Dudley Mac Firbis, in the Library of the Royal Irish Academy, copied by Mr. Curry from the original in the possession of the Earl of Roden. Dr. O’Conor has edited it from two MSS. in the Library of the Duke of Buckingham, at Stowe. Mr. Pinkerton has also printed it, with a very erroneous version, by the elder Charles O’Conor. As Dr. O’Conor’s version is also full of errors, it has been thought necessary to add a more correct translation of so important a document to the present work.—(T.)

^d Lately spoken: i.e. Dudley Mac Firbis, in his genealogical work, from which this poem is taken, had lately spoken of the families of Dal-Riada. See Reeves’s Eccl. Antiq. of Down and Connor, p. 318.—(T.)

^e Defective.—Hence it appears that the defects of this poem are of ancient date. They are also noted by O’Flaherty, who says: "Verum aliquot desideratis distichis, integrum apographum reperire non contigit."—Ogyg. p. 467. The defect, our author says, is manifest from the number of kings (fifty-two) mentioned in the last stanza, which does not agree with the number given in the poem, or with that given by other authorities.—(T.)

^f The land of Alba—Albanρυιῖ may, perhaps, be for Albanρυιῖε, the kingdom of Alba. Pinkerton and Dr. O'Conor read Albanβρυιῖ, the land of Alban, which is perhaps correct, or ρυιῖ may be the gen. of ρυο, a wood or forest. In the first verse Dr. O'Conor takes uile as agreeing with Alban, "vos docti Albaniae totius;" but he ought to have rendered it, "vos docti Albaniae omnes." In verse 3 he is also entirely wrong; he translates it, "Qui primi didicerunt scientiam e vestris;" but ῡαβαλ is a substantive, not a verb. Mr. Skene, in his English version of this poem (Collectanea de rebus Albanicis, edited by the Iona Club, p. 70), is still further from the original, for he renders ver. 3, "Learn who first."—(T.)

^g Numerous.—Dr. O'Conor reads ρια, which may mean with; and λια, as Pinkerton and the original MS. read, may be for λe, O all ye learned of Alba !

 Ye well skilled host of yellow hair !
 What was the first invasion—is it known to you ?
 Which took the land of Alba^f ?

 He and Briutus were brothers without deceit,
 From him Alba of ships has its name.

with, but it may also signify numerous. Mr. Skene renders $\rho\lambda\sigma$, race, which is wrong. Dr. O'Connor might have taught him the true meaning. In the next line Dr. O'Connor renders $\text{mac } \rho\epsilon\text{in}$ "filius istius," which ought to be "filius ille fuit." For η , in line 7, Dr. O'Connor and Pinkerton read oo . For the fancied descent of Albanus and Brutus or Britus from Isicon or Isacon, and Japheth, see above, p. 33.—(T.)

^h Active.—Pinkerton and Dr. O'Connor take $\text{br}\rho\eta$ as a proper name, and translate, "His brother Bras;" but this is nonsense, for the expelled brother was evidently Albanus; and we have no notice in any of the other accounts of a brother called Bras. $\text{O}\rho\eta$ means active, energetic, restless. For the sea of Icht, see p. 31, note ⁱ, Dr. O'Connor and Mr. Skene have mistaken the meaning of the epithet $\text{n-}\alpha\text{m}\eta\eta$, not perceiving that the n was merely euphonic.—(T.)

ⁱ Fothudan.—I am not able to identify this promontory with its modern name. It appears to be here spoken of as the extreme northern point of Scotland. Old Charles O'Connor (in Pinkerton) and Dr. O'Connor, make Fothudan the name of a man; the former translates this line "to the plains of the hunter Fothudan;" and the latter, "usque ad fines venatoris Fo-

^k*Erglan*.—Dr. O'Conor renders the word Εργλαν as an adjective, clamantes, confounding it with ἀροζλοαά. Mr. Skene makes it the name of a country. "The race of Neimhidh," he says, "acquired Earglan," but he does not tell us where "Earglan" was. Old Charles O'Conor (see Pinkerton, vol. ii. p. 107) made it the name of a man, one of the leaders of the Nemedians, and for this he has the authority of the Book of Leacan (fol. 276, a), where we have the following account of the Nemedian chieftains who survived the battle in which Conaing's tower was destroyed. Do looar pin por

^m Afterwards. — Mr. Skene translates, "The Cruithne acquired the western region." Dr. O'Connor has rendered it correctly—(T.)

ⁿ Plain.—Meaning, perhaps, μαῖξ ὄρεῖξ, or Bregia. See above, p. 125. Comp. also pp. 139, 145. Old Charles O'Connor, in Pinkerton, and Dr. O'Connor, render plains in the plural, which is wrong. Mr. Skene falls into the same error, but he has corrected Dr. O'Connor's "in Hiberniæ campos." In line 20 he is also right in rendering ἄλας plains (although wrong in making it plural), instead of O'Connor's "Cruthniam illustrem."—(T.)

^o Cathluan.—See above, pp. 125, 139, 159. In line 22, ἄο cumair does not signify veraciter, as Dr. O'Connor renders it, nor explicitly, as Mr. Skene has it. Pinkerton reads ἄο θεμιον, verily.—(T.)

^p Eochadh, i. e. Eochadh Muinreamhar, of the race of Conaire II., King of Ireland, the ancestor of the Dalriadan kings of Ireland and Scotland. See Reeves's Ecc. Antiq. p. 320. King Conaire was called Caomh, or the beautiful (as in line 27), to distinguish him from Conaire I., who was called Conaire Mor, or the Great. In line 27, O'Connor and Skene read να καιοῖμ ῥῖρ, which would be plural, and is evidently wrong.—(T.)

⁹ Valiant.—The word αιτ is rendered strenuus by Colgan, Trias Thaum., p. 115, col. 1, where he quotes lines 25–40. In line 31 he renders αρυ α ηḡαρ, “elato animo.” ḡαρ signifies mind, courage, spirit; see line 35. Dr. O’Conor and Mr. Skene read αρυ ηḡαρ, which is evidently a mistake.—(T.)

[†] Patrick.—See Jocelyn, Vit. S. Patr. c. 137, where this blessing is described as given to Fergus only; “Sanctus vero Patricius prædictum benedixit Fergusium” [scil. Fergus Muinreamhar, son of Ere, prince of Dalaradia], “et voce propheticâ dixit ad illum; Licet hodie videaris humilis, et despectus in conspectu fratrum tuorum, eris in brevi princeps illorum omnium. De te enim optimi reges egredientur, qui non solum in terra propria, sed etiam in regione longinqua et peregrina principabuntur;” and see Colgan’s note on this passage, Tr. Thaum., p. 114.—(T.)

⁵ Bounds.—Colgan (ubi supr.) renders this line “in principatu finium Albania:” The poet wishes to intimate that Loarn’s sovereignty extended to the very extremities of Alban. Pinkerton reads iar-thar Alban, "of western Alban," which is a mistake. Dr. O'Connor has the right reading, but translates it illustrious; and Mr. Skene, not satisfied with this, makes it a proper name, "Oirir Alban," but without explaining what he supposed to be meant. For the genealogy of Loarn see Ogyg. p. 470—(T.)

^t Courageous.—Colgan reads, peil gu ngur; O'Connor, rgel go ngur, which he renders "historia est nota." Pinkerton has phel go ngur, and translates absurdly, "a space likewise." Mr. Skene follows O'Connor's reading, which he renders, not very intelligibly, "keenly the tale." See line 31. Fergus was surnamed the Great, and was called Mac Mise, from the name of his mother. O'Flaherty assigns only sixteen years to his reign, which he says commenced A.D. 513.—Ogyg. p. 472.—(T.)

^u Three years five times: i. e. 15. Mr. Skene renders this, erroneously, "three years and five;" although Dr. O'Connor's version is correct. In line 41 Pinkerton reads, chonnaḉ ḡan tap; Dr. O'Conor, conaḡḡ ḡan tap. A note in the margin of Mac Firbis's MS. makes Conaḡḡ the name of a king, who reigned conjointly with Gobhran; but this must be a mistake.—(T.)

^x Provinces: lit. "of many divisions." Dr. O'Conor and Mr. Skene translate, "of golden swords," reading na n-íolrann. But Dr. O'Conor mentions the other reading, p. cxxxvii. Pinkerton reads, na íolrann, "of extended plains." Tall, in line 45, signifies within, i. e. in possession,—an ancient brehon law term.—(T.)

^y Ten years seven times: i. e. seventy years. This has been translated by old Charles O'Conor, who furnished Pinkerton with his version of this poem, "ten years by seven," which certainly meant 70, although Pinkerton understood it 17. And it has been rendered 17 by Dr. O'Conor and Mr. Skene. But let the authority of the Duan suffer as it may, deḉ m-bliadna fo reacet must mean seventy years. O'Flaherty assigns to Aidan a reign of thirly-two years, and to Eochaidh Buidhe twenty-three, following the authority of Tighernach. In line 47, reol is literally sailing, and signifies his lifetime, career,

^z The poems: i. e. the historical poems, which were the bardic historians' authorities; or which constituted the title deeds of the kings named. See the Brehon law tract (H. 3. 18, p. 22) in the Library of Trin. Coll. Dublin. Mr. Skene renders these words, "by dominion of swords," confounding paonn with pinn; but Dr. O'Conor's version is correct. The reigns assigned to Fearchar and Domhnall in this stanza are too long. See Ogyg. p. 477; and Pinkerton, vol. ii. p. 117. This was the Domhnall who was defeated at the Battle of Magh Rath, which gives the date of

^a Of the towns.—Dr. O'Conor renders this "celebrem famâ," confounding bla with blaö, fame, a totally different word, which occurred a little before, line 49, where he renders pel blaö, very absurdly, "regno legitimo inelyto," and Mr. Skene, still more strangely, "a shooting star." In the Brehon laws, bla is put for baile, a town or townland. The two Domhnalls or Donnells are distinguished by the surnames of Breac, speckled, and Donn, brown.—(T.)

^c Mansions.—The word riḡteac seems to be a compound of riḡ, a king, and teac, a house; or teac may be merely the adjective termination, in which case the word will signify royal, as Mr. Skene renders it, perhaps correctly—(T.)

^d Afterwards.—Mr. Skene renders iaprtain, "of the western regions," not knowing that Irish scribes write tt for o. The death of Ainchellach is given by Tighernach under the year 719. After Ainchellach the Annals mention two kings: Selbach, son of Ferchair, and brother of Ainchellach; and Eochadh III., son of Eochadh II., who is mentioned line 61. O'Flaherty assigns to these two reigns a period of fourteen years, from A. D. 719 to 733, in which last year the death of Eochadh mac Eochach is recorded by Tighernach. Pinkerton gives Selbhach a reign of twenty years, and to Eochaidh "about ten." The Duan is therefore here corrupted. A stanza appears to have been omitted, and the two lines 65 and 66, as Dr. O'Connor suggests, were probably transposed to fill up the gap; but they contain the wrong names. There was probably some confusion made by an early copyist in the Eochaidhs, for it is remarkable that the defects in the Duan all occur in connexion with a king of this name. Thus, for Sealbhach and Eochaidh III., the Duan substitutes Dungal and Alpin; it omits Dungal and Eochaidh IV., who ought to come in between Muiredach (line 67) and Aodh (line 68); and it also omits Eochaidh V. and Alpin, who ought to come in between Eoganan (line 76) and Cionaeth or Kenneth Mac Alpin (line 77). It is further remarkable that these errors are in each case double, arising from the original omission of two kings, and the subsequent attempt to mend the defect by transposition. The list, as given by O'Flaherty, with the duration of each reign, is as follows: Muiredach, three years; Dungal II., seven; Eochadh IV., five; Aodh Fionn, or Aodh I., thirty; Domhnall III., twenty-four; Conall III., two; Conall IV., four; Constantine, nine; Aongus, nine; Aodh II., four; Eoganan, thirteen; Eochadh V., part of one; Alpin, four; Kenneth Mac Alpin, thirty; Domhnall Mac Alpin, four; Constantine II., Mac Cinaodha (i. e. son of Kenneth), fourteen; Aodh Mac Cinaodha, two.—(T.)

* Eoghanan.—Here a stanza seems to be omitted, of which lines 65 and 66 probably formed part, except that for Dungal, in line 65, we should read Eochadh. See last note. From the next king, Cionaithe or Kenneth Mac Alpin, the list of kings here given agrees, or originally did agree, with the Chronicon Pictorum; see above, p. 167, where a reign of sixteen years only is assigned to Cionaithe.—(T.)

Mr. Skene translate it "white shielded," taking ροῦῆᾰ῅ for ρεῖᾰῆᾰ῅. Constantine (line 80) and this Aodh Fionnscothach were the sons of Kenneth Mac Alpin. Girig (or Gregory) Mac Dungail is inserted between Aodh and Domhnall, son of Constantine, both in O'Flaherty's list and in the Chron. Pictorum. See above, p. 167. But he is omitted by the Duan, perhaps designedly.—(T.)

^e A year four times : i. e. four years. The reader will observe that this is the same form of expression which has been already misunderstood by former translators ; see lines 43 and 47. Even O'Flaherty was misled by it here, and assigns to Domhnal, son of Constantine, a reign of five years. Dr. O'Connor renders it "annum cum quatuor (annis)." The author adopted the unusual mode of saying four, only for the sake of his metre. Ro c̄aic̄ (line 84) signifies spent or passed (on the throne), i. e. lived or reigned ; see lines 60 and 70.—(T.)

^h Combat : i. e., probably, his contest for the throne ; ḡleac̄ is a fight, a battle, not "impetus in præliis," as Dr. O'Connor renders it. This Constantine was the son of Aodh, who was the son of Kenneth Mac Alpin ; see line 82.—(T.)

² Mac Duibh, or Macduff: i. e. the son of Dubhoda, line 39. O'Flaherty says: "Grimus, Scotice Macduibh; hoc est Duffi seu Dubhodonis filius, quem proprio nomine Kenneth dictum invenio. Rex Pictorum octennio.—Cambr. Ever. page 94. Quippe 7 annis ab anno 997 et parte octavi ad annum 1004."—Ogyg. p. 488. There is evidently some confusion in these names in the Irish version of the Chronicon Pictorum, which was Lynch's authority in the place referred to of Cambr. Eversus; but still it is probable that "Cinead fil Dubh" there mentioned (see p. 167, supra), was the same who is here called Mac Duibh or Macduff.—(T.)

^m Monaidh: i. e. Dun Monaidh in Lorne, in Scotland, the well-known fortress or palace of the Dalriadic kings of Scotland: now Dunstaffnage. See Battle of Magh Rath, p. 46, n. ^a. Dr. O’Conor makes the absurd blunder of translating π Monaidh, “rex montium,” and in this he is followed by Mr. Skene.—(T.)

ⁿ Son of Fionnlaoich: i. e. Mac Beathaidh, or Macbeth, so called from his mothers’s name. See above, p. 167.—(T.)

^o Is now the king.—Malcolm, son of Donnchad, slew his predecessor Lulach, on the 1st of January, A. D. 1058, according to Tighernach, and was himself killed in 1093. This determines the age of the poem, and also of the list of kings before given, which also terminates with Malcolm, and was therefore, probably, written in his reign. See above, p. 167.—(T.) scribes, who used to write in the margin the initial word of the poem, whenever the same word occurred at the end of a line. Colgan quotes this stanza, Trias Thaum., p. 115, and translates it thus:

"Malcolmus nunc est Rex,
 Filius Domchadi speciosi et vividi vultus,
 Ejus annos non novit ullus
 Præter illum scientem, qui omnia novit."

Kings.—Only forty-seven kings are enumerated in the present text of the poem. But O'Flaherty has made up the number of fifty-two from the Annals and other sources.

The comparison of his list with the poem shews that in the latter two kings have been transposed, and five omitted. The transposed kings are Dungal, changed from the twenty-second to the nineteenth place, and Alpin, changed from the thirty-third to the twentieth. The omitted kings are No. 19, Selvach; the three Eochaidhs (viz. No. 20, Eochaidh Mac Eochaidh; 23, Eochaidh Angbhuidh; 32, Eochaidh Mac Aodha finn); and 38, Gairig, or Gregory Mac Dungail.—(T.)

^r The east: i. e. east of Ireland. Scotland is frequently called “the East” by Irish writers. This proves that the poem, or at least this stanza, was written in Ireland, and not in Scotland. For an oip, Dr. O’Connor and Mr. Skene read an óip, “of the gold,” which is wrong, and makes no sense.—(T.)

^e The conjecture of Camden, i. 178, ed. Gibson.

The root of these lists of the twenty-eight cities is in the commencement of the Liber Querulus of Gildas, who describes Britannia as being “bis denis bisque quaternis civitatibus, ac nonnullis castellis, &c. decorata;” and seems as if he were quoting part of his words from some poet; cap. 1, and Beda, i. cap. 1. The general tradition is, that they were the sees of the twenty-five bishops and three archbishops of the British Church; as may be seen at large in Ussher’s Primordia, cap. 5. The three archbishoprics were London, York, and Caerleon-upon-Usk. The allusion to the words of Gildas and Beda in those of the Historia is so apparent, that we cannot doubt but the original number in Marcus was xxviii.; and that the scribe of 946 altered it, by the introduction of other names he had collected, and expunged (as false and exaggerated) those remarkable words in which the author seems to pay a compliment to Fermael Lord of Guorthigerniawn, and perhaps to his own native place, “prima civitas Britanniae est quae vocatur Caer Gurthigirn.” Of his thirty-three cities the copier places York and Canterbury, the two palls or archiepiscopates of England, first and second; thereby shewing that his repeated dates of “quintus Eadmundi regis” correctly point out his nation, and probably his subjection to the northern primate; the unknown Caer Gurcoc, third; while Caer-Guorthigern has the fourth place. A Welch MS. of Genealogies of the same century, viz. the tenth, gives the list of twenty-eight cities nearly as it is in Nennius, ap. Cambrian Quart. Mag. vol. iv.

It is a remarkable fact, that Mr. C. Bertram has printed in his Ricardus Corinaeus, that of ninety-two British towns thirty-three were chief; viz.: the two free cities or municipia of Verulam and York, nine Roman coloniae, ten governed by Latin law under the Lex Julia, and twelve inferior and merely tributary. This list is essentially different in names from the Nennian twenty-eight and the five others making the Petavian thirty-three; and is fundamentally distinct in its basis, being civil, not ecclesiastical. Yet it exhibits that very number (thirty-three), which the Petavian MS. of 946 has effected by adding five names to the twenty-eight. But Mr. Bertram surely never saw that MS. What, then, shall we say? That he found the number thirty-three in some other copy, and worked upon it? I regard the enumeration as part of his figments, and no ancient fragment; for if it were true that Eboracum was also governed suo jure, Verulam should not have been called Caer Municip, nor would his surname of Municeps have explained whence the tyrant Gratianus came. Vide Ric. Corin. p. 36, Havniae 1757, p. 111, ap. Johnstone Ant. Celto-Norman. ibid. 1786. (H.)

Lluyd, in his Archæologia, tit. i. p. 20, col. 3, supposes Cpuirneac to be a corruption of Ōpīrneac, pictus, curigatus; see also O’Brien, Diet. in voce. But this is scarcely credible;

credible; Duaid Mac Firbis gives the following explanation of this word: Cruiθneach (Pictus) neac̄ do θabaō cpoθa no dealbā anmann, eun, aθur iarθ, ap a emeac̄, .i. ap a aīθiō: aθur θiō nī uirpe aīhan ac̄e ap a cōpp uile. θoiriō Serap Cruiθnīθ .i. pic̄i, do b̄r̄ēnaiθ do cuircaō aθiō feoil do b̄ōō 7 do b̄aoap opra ionap θomōīr uaθ̄m̄apa ne a nam̄au. “Cruithneach (Pictus), one who paints the crutks (forms) of beasts, birds, and fishes on his eineach (face), and not on his face only, but on his whole body. Cæsar calls the Britons Cruithnigh, i. e. Picti, because they used to stain their faces with woad, in order that they might appear terrible to their enemies.”—Genealogies. Marq. of Drogheda’s copy, p. 162. For this quotation I am indebted to Mr. O’Donovan. Cæsar’s words are: “Omnes vero se Britanni vitro inficiunt, quod cœruleum efficit colorem. Atque hoc horridiori sunt in pugna aspectu; capilloque sunt premissis atque omni parte corporis rasâ, præter caput et labrum superius.”—De Bello Gall. lib. v. c. 14.—(T.)

Abonia.—Eubonia or Manaw is the Isle of Man. The Romans considered it as having the same name with Anglesea, viz. Mon; and probably with reason, for Mon is a cow, and that idea is preserved in the islet called the Calf of Man. But synonymes required a mark of distinction, which is found in the Mona-æda of Ptolemy, the Mon-apia of Pliny, the Eu-bonia of Nennius, and the Eu-monia or Eu-mania of some MSS. of Orosius, as well as the Men-avia clearly meant in those which have Mevania. The word united to the primary one is probably that very aw, which now forms Manaw, the Welch for Man, and which Beda extended to both in his Menavia^f Insulæ, Hist. i. cap. 9. It meant^g to blow, both naturally, and in the metaphors of spirit, inspiration, afflatus, &c. This would give us Monavia, and Aumonia or Eumonia (all as one, in ancient spelling), and with the mutation, Auonia or Euonia, for the Mona of Winds. In an ancient MS. (Harl. 3859, ap. Cambr. Qu. Mag. iv. p. 23), Man is called Manau Guodotin, and in a supplement of Nennius (Nenn. cap. 66, ex MS. Cotton, ap. Gale, p. 116), “regio quæ vocatur Manaw Guotadin.” Though not the same place, it is perhaps the same word

^f So corrected by Mr. Sharon Turner, Hist. Anglo-Sax. i. 347, ed. iv. But in his text, as in Orosius, Mevania.

^g It does not exist as a verb like aw; but as a root, in awel, a blast of wind; awelu, to blow; awen, inspiration, &c. And (with a restrictive sense in the prefix ta) taw, stillness, silence;

tawel, calm, serene; tawelu, to make or become calm. See Edw. Llwyd, Comp. Vocab. Owen Diet. Ta is superior, as Dr. Owen shews by an instance (a point essential to the legitimate citation of his Dictionary); and ascendancy over wind, or breath, makes a calm, or silence.

word as Aneurin's Gododin. Rejecting the din (meaning an enclosed or defensible place) we may possibly obtain from the Guodo or Guota the Μονα-Οιδζ, or Mona-œda of Ptolemy; for the G disappears in composition. But Mona seems to be the foundation of all the names.

While the Romans were still ruling in Britain, Man was an Irish Island. "æquë (with Hibernia) a Scotorum gentibus habitata."—Orosius, i. cap. 2. But whether this had been always so, or became so by the ruin of the Britons, no man now can say. The first occupation of Man by the Irish was probably not later than A. D. 254, in which year there is a tradition that King Cormac M^cArt drove some of the rebellious Ultonians into that island.—Tigernach, in anno 254. Nevertheless it may have been earlier.

The earliest accounts of it, however, are much too early, belonging to the fabulous epoch and legends of the Tuatha De Danann. The following statement is extracted from the ancient MS. Glossary of Cormac M^cCuillen^h. "Manannan Mac Lir was a famous merchant, that lived in the island of Manann. He was the best navigator that was in the sea in the west of the world. He used to ascertain by heaven-study, that is, observation of the heavens, the duration of calm and storm, and the time when either of these two periods would change. "Inde Scoti et Britones eum dominum maris vocaverunt, inde filium maris esse dixerunt, i. e. Mac Lir; et de nomine Manannain insola Manainn dicta estⁱ." But other authorities tell us, if we are to trust O'Flaherty, that the name of this merchant was Oirbsion or Orbsen, son of Allad, son of Alathan, and nephew of the Daghdá; and that he was called Manannan, because of his intercourse with the Isle of Man^j. Orbsen Manannan was slain in battle by Ullinn, son of Tadhg, son of Nuada the Silver-handed, at the place therefore called Magh-Ullinn or Moycullin, in Galway. Some say, that Loch Oirbsion or Orbsen broke out while his grave was being dug. See the Ogygia, part iii. cap. 14, p. 179; and Keating. That the Britons knew this legend of Man, may be supposed from the surname M^cLlyr, son of the water or of the sea.^k Bran ap Llyr is the fabulous father of

^j In the copy of Cormac's Glossary in the Library of Trin. Coll. Dub. (H. 2, 15) there is the following note on the above quoted passage, in the hand-writing of Duall Mac Firbis: $\text{H} \circ \circ$

$\text{Inip Manann a depar Manannan nup.}$
"Or he was called Manannan from the Isle of Manann."—(T.)

^k Lep or Lep , the sea, (genitive Lip) is still a living word in Irish.—(T.) In H. A. Bullock's History of the Isle of Man, the tradition of Manannan is thus spoken of: "Mananan Mac Lyr (the first man who held Man, was ruler thereof, and af-of the elder Caradoc, and Bran ap Llyr Marini that of Caradoc Vreichbras. The conversion of Man to Christianity is ascribed to one Germanus, an emissary of St. Patrick, who was succeeded by two others named Conidrius and Romulus. Jocelyn. Vita Patric. cap. 92, 152; Vita Quarta, cap. 81.

By Orek are denoted the Orcades or Orkneys, Orcania of Nennius. Ore in Gaelic is a whale or other large fish; and possibly may have had the same sense in ancient Gaulish and British; as it had also in Latin, "orca genus marinæ belluæ maximum dicitur" (Pomp. Festus), whence the orca of the Italian romantic poets, and in French orque.

" Then shall this mount
Of Paradise by might of waves be moved

With all his verdure spoiled and trees adrift,
Down the great river to the opening gulf,
And there take root, an island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and ores and seamews' clang."—Paradise Lost, xi. 829–37.

Orcades, or Ore Ynys, the islands of whales. See Armstrong's Gaelic Dictionary in Orc. Other etymologies, from the Teutonic, may be seen in Wallace and Torfaeus; but they appear to me false and trivial. The Oρκας "Αρχα of Ptolemy was Dunnet Head in Caithness, over against the islands.

The Irish translator has omitted a good passage of Marcus and Nennius: "So in an old proverb it is said, when speaking of judges and kings, He judged Britain with the three islands."—(II.)

No. IV. See page 42.

The first man.—The two first paragraphs of Irish history are borrowed, with corrections, from Nennius, cap. 6; at p. 50 of Marcus. The Latin has Bartholomæus, Partholomæus, Partholomus; and, as it seems acknowledged that Partholan's name means Bartholomew, we must admire the credulity which could believe that apostolic name to have been known in Ireland 311 years after the flood. Ogygia, ii. p. 65. The same remark applies to Simon Brec. It is very remarkable that Partholan, first King of Ireland, and Brutus, first King of Britain, were both abhorred for having killed ter whom the land was named) reigned many years; and was a paynim. He kept land under mists by his necromancy. If he dreaded an enemy, he would of one man cause to seem one hundred; and that by art magic."—Old Statute Book, cit.

killed father and mother. See Keating, p. 25. By “Nemech quidam filius agnominis,” the copyists probably understood son of his own cognominis or namesake. The transcriber of Marcus has left it blank, in doubt of its meaning; and he did wisely. For the original reading is “filius Agnomain”, or Agnamhain. See Ogygia, ii. p. 65; Wood’s Primitive Inhabitants of Ireland, p. 13; Keating’s Genealogy, p. 30. The same name, Agnoman, occurs very early in the voyages of the Gaidheliens. Gildas Coem. ap. Ogygia, ii. p. 67. Our translator corrects the Historia, which had represented Nemed himself as sailing away again; whereas it was his posterity, after a sojourn of 216 years.—(H.)

No. V. See page 44.

Viri Bullorum. &c.—The Firbolg, Firdomnan, and Fingalian, are inserted by the translator. The name Firbolg is also a general one, and comprehensive of all the three. Mr. O’Flaherty does not doubt but they were colonies from Great Britain, of the Belgæ, Damnonii, and another tribe. Ogygia, i. pp. 14, 15; Keating, p. 39. The account of the Tuatha De Danann is also inserted. They are said to have come from the northern parts of Europe, and their name may be rendered The Tribe of Gods from Denmark. Danann for Dania, as Manann for Mannia. The first mention of the Dani is in Servius, “Dahæ . . . unde Dani dicti,” in Æneid. viii. 728; and the second, in Venantius Fortunatus de Lupo Duce, vi. 7, 49:

Saxonis et Dani gens citò vieta probat.”

The three tribes of Tuatha De Danann were descended from the three sons of Danann, called Gods (and esteemed such) for their skill in magic; whence perhaps the phrase Plebes Deorum. They first came (it is fabled) into the north of Britain, where they inhabited places called Dobar and Ir-dobar (quere Tir?) and whence they removed to the north of Ireland; and their title of De has been accounted for by the name of the River Dee. O’Flaherty, Ogygia, i. p. 12. But their story shews, that they were a race endowed with such arts and powers, as might obtain them credit for a divine origin. And there is no reason for supposing that Dobar was near the River Dee. The interpretation of the name of this colony is quite independent of the question of its having ever existed; of which there is neither proof, nor much probability. Their legend represents them to have spoken a German, not a British, dialect, which is accordant to the notion of their being Danes, but is by no means accordant to the catalogue of their names; and so far their story belies itself. The letters of which the invention is ascribed to the Danannian Ogina, brother of the Daghdâ, are not that modification of the Latin alphabet used in Irish and Anglo-Saxon writings, but the cyphers called ogham; the superior antiquity of which seems to me to involve this difficulty, that they almost imply and presuppose the existence of ordinary alphabetic writing.—(II.)

Out of the kingdom of Scythia, &c.—There is no probability, and a want of distinct testimony, even legendary, that Ireland ever received any considerable body of settlers, but direct from Britain. Ireland, in effect, received but three classes of colonists. For the Nemedians were Bartholomæans, and the Fírbolg and Tuatha De Danann were both Nemedians. Besides this class there were the Gaidhil or Scoti, into which prevalent colony the whole nation resolved itself; and thirdly, the Cruithnich or Pictish settlement. But the Fírbolg and Danann were both direct from Britain, the former manifestly, and the latter avowedly. And the Scots, after various peregrinations, went from Pictland or Albany in North Britain to Spain, and thence over to Ireland. The whole mention of Spain in that legend is etymological, and was meant to unite the two names, so slightly dissimilar, and sometimes (as Mr. O'Flaherty observes) confounded, of Iberus and Ibernus; as the mention of Scythia is also an etymologism for Scot. The three (or rather two) classes of colonists seem to have been the South Britons, of Belgic origin; the North Britons, of Celtic origin; and certain Britons, who must have belonged either to the one or other division, and were distinguished by retaining in Ireland their custom of staining the skin, at a time when no others did.

The name Scoti is identified by Nennius and by Irish bardic antiquaries with Scythæ, and that verbal resemblance is the sole foundation of their travels from Scythia. No Roman, meaning to say Scythæ, could express it Scotus; and no savage of Hibernia could think of applying to himself the eastern and generic title of Scythian. Words are almost a waste on such topics. The name of Scoti is said to be first used by Porphyry, about A. D. 277^j. But this must be doubtful in the extreme; as St. Jerome^k, quoting Porphyry, would put “Scoticæ gentes” according to his own custom and that of his day, where Porphyry had put τὰ τῶν Ἰουζργων ἔθνη. If so, Ammianus will be the earliest who names them, at the close of the fourth century. Before these authors no Greek or Roman had heard of a Scot; and the name Scot was very probably unknown in Hibernia. If it be the same as scuite, a wanderer or rover, it is unintentionally explained by Ammianus in his “Scoti per diversa vagantes.” Its origin should date from the time when they devoted themselves to piracy; from

^j That is the year to which Schoell, in his Table Chronologique, gives Porphyry's name, as flourishing.

after which time, as Ammianus is the first ascertained authority, its known origin does in point of fact date. And we may suppose that it was not prevalent, until the sea-kings of Erin became troublesome to the neighbouring shores, which was scarcely in the third century, or perhaps after the middle of it, when Cormac Mac Art obtained celebrity in various ways. Achy Mogmedon, father of Niall the Great, seems first to have become formidable in that shape. This supposition squares admirably with the observation in Ogygia iii. 72, that although the Irish called their Gaidhelian people Scots, no such territorial epithet as Scotia or Scotland was known in their language; for they had not that name in regard of their land, but of renouncing the land, and making their home upon the deep, and among the creeks and coves of every defenceless shore. The ancient word scud, a boat or ship, plural, scuid, hath a close agreement with scuite, a wanderer, and Scut, a Scot; and it may be doubted, whether this obsolete Gaelic word did not primarily signify roving in coracles. Sallee existed before there were Sallee rovers; and so did Ireland, long before she had her scots or rovers. Bardic fable so far says true, that it was the latest denomination of the pagan kings of Erin; and the protracted rovings or wanderings of Eibhear Scot and his family through almost all lands and seas seem like a vast romantic gloss upon the appellation. For they were, indeed, a race of Errones, and that is the characteristic feature of their story.—(II.)

Seeds of battle.—Cæsar speaks of the spikes which Cassibellanus placed in the Thames, as large stakes, not caltrops: “ripa autem erat acutis sudibus præfixis munita, ejusdemque generis sub aqua defixæ sudes flumine tegebantur,” (De Bello Gall. v. 18.) ; and Bede says, that these stakes remained to his time, “quarum vestigia sudium ibidem usque hodie visuntur, et videtur inspectantibus quod singulæ earum ad modum humani femoris grossæ, et circumfusæ plumbo immobiliter erant in profundum fluminis infixæ.”—Hist. Eccl. i. 2. But we can hardly suppose such solid stakes to have been described under the name of “semen bellicosum.”

I am indebted to Mr. Eugene Curry for the following illustrations of the words Ḑrana catha, which I have translated seeds of battle.

In a MS. glossary on paper, written in the seventeenth century, and now preserved in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin (H. 2. 15. p. 126,) the words are thus explained:

Ḑrain catha .i. beara, ut erc, “Ḑrain GRAIN CATHA, i. e. spikes; as “SIL are put or set in the entrance fords of an unfortified¹ country:” i. e. spikes or things that are sown like seed in a field, in the solitary passes of the country.

 This is what is meant by GRAN CATHA [seeds of battle].

The words in inverted commas are evidently quoted from some more ancient tract or glossary.

In the Felire Beg, or little Festilogium, an ancient Calendar, preserved in the library of the Royal Irish Academy, in a MS. which is at least as old as the fourteenth century, the following is given (p. 23) as the first of three great qualifications of a distinguished champion:

Τρειδι ἀρα νεαμζεαυαῆαp laech;
 caehclep cu ποεαpθαυ, .i. ὄpam ca-θα, cu ceapzaυ ποiche m γαε bulγα.

Three things that constitute a champion: Battle skill with subordinate arts, viz. GRAIN CATHA, with the skilful setting the GAE BULGA [belly spear].

The gae bulga, or belly spear, was a short spear which was used by the combatant to strike from beneath, and pierce the belly of his opponent under his shield. In the curious ancient romance called Tain bo Cuaigne, or “The Plunder of the Cuaigian Cows,” the hero Cuchulann, the champion of Ulster, is introduced making use of the gae bulga, in his combat with Ferdiadh, the champion of Connaught, at Ath-Firdiadh, the ford of Firdiadh (so called from the name of the hero), now Ardee. It appears from this narrative that the weapon was thrown from the foot, and the art seems to have consisted in keeping the adversary busy in protecting his head and body, whilst the gae bulga was suddenly seized between the toes, and struck under his shield into his belly. It is described as a barbed dart, which after entering the body threw out thirty blades that sprang loose and inflicted an incenrable and deadly wound within.

It is not necessary to our present purpose to enter into any more particular account of this probably fabulous weapon, or to collect together the notices of it which occur in Irish MSS. It must suffice to observe that both the gae bulga, or belly-spear, and the grain catha, or battle seed, seem to have been used chiefly, if not always, in fords of rivers, the water serving to conceal the weapon, or the caltrops, from the enemy.

enemy. In the case of the battle, or rather the single combat, at the ford of Ardee (described in the romance of the Tain bo Cuailgne), the attendant or esquire of Cuchulann is represented as sending the gae bulga to his master through the water, floated probably by some contrivance so as to escape the notice of the enemy; and it was then caught by Cuchulann between his toes, under the water, and driven instantly into the belly of his assailant.—(T.)

The King was baptized.—The famous legend of King Lucius (from Nennius, cap. 18) has its earliest voucher in Bede; whose accounts of its date are both erroneous and discrepant^m. Annalists have varied from 138 to 199 in assigning its epoch. But that would not affect the fact itself, were it otherwise authentic. There were then in Caledonia and in Cornwall, if not elsewhere, some independent princes or chieftains, of whom this Lucius may have been one. But it has much the appearance of a fable, forming part of the romance of the kings of Britain. Mr. Carte has forcibly observed, that Gildas's design led him to speak of it, and yet he doth not mention so much as the name of Lucius, i. p. 133. The real question is, whether Bede took his brief statement out of Roman or ecclesiastical history, or from a Celtic legend. Such a legend might well grow out of a statement, that Christianity was planted in Britain "Marco Aurelio et Lucio regnantibus;" for the Emperor Lucius (as L. Verusⁿ was commonly termed) figures in the inconsistent dates of this transaction; both of which are in his life, and intended to be in his reign; and the latter is in his reign. "M. Antoninus Verus cum fratre Aur. Lucio Commodo . . . quorum temporibus . . . misit . . . Lucius Britannorum rex," &c. Henr. Hunt. i, p. 304.

Nothing can be more confused than the accounts given of this name. For in British it is written Lles (whether in speaking of this man, or of any other Lucius^o), meaning gain or profit; of which Lucius is no translation, though it may very remotely imitate the præsul factus 15 annos ecclesiam gloriosissimè rexit, cui litteras rex Britannie Lucius mittens," &c.—Epitome, p. 278. Here we get into the reign of the emperors, but are still ten years short of the pontificate of Eleutherius.

the sound. But they surname him Lleuver, i. e. bright or luminous, which is evidently meant to express the etymon of Lucius. Thus inconsistent is fiction. Some copies of Nennius have these words: "Lucius agnomine Lever Maur, id est, Magni Splendoris, propter fidem quæ in ejus tempore venit." The author of the Cambreis^p gave the same rationale of the name Lucius,

" ——— Coilo sneedit Lucius, orto
Lucifero præluclior, nam luet in ejus Tempore vera fides."

It is furthermore pretended that his real name was Lleirwg; Lleuver Mawr (and consequently Lucius) being merely a title of honour. Neither in the Liber Land-avensis, nor in Mr. J. Williams's Eccles. Antiq. of the Cymry, pp. 66–7, nor elsewhere, can I discover any thing that deserves to be called an historical corroboration of Beda. The Welch hagiography applicable to this name is vain and fictitious. The family of Bran ap Llyr is described as one of the holy or saintly families of Britain^q; and it is pretended he was the father of Caractacus, who, being taken prisoner with his son, learned Christianity at Rome. But it is well known, that Caractacus was one of the sons of Cynobeline, whose death preceded the war between his children and the Romans. Dion Cassius ix. cap. 20. This Bran ap Llyr was a sorcerer, whose whole legend is magic. See the Mabinogi of Branwen. His grandson, son of Caractacus, is said to have been St. Cyllin; but it is tolerably certain, that Caractacus had no son whom the Romans took. Cyllin is fancifully supposed (see Taylor's Calmet. v. p. 259; Triad xlii. series 1^r) to have been Linus, first Bishop of Rome after St. Peter. It is not very likely, that Linus should be written for Cyllinus; which must either change the quantity, or reject the accented syllable. Nor is it likely that the name Linus, as old as mythology^s itself, and common at Rome, where Martial ridicules^t at least two persons of that name, should be the mutilated name of a British Celt. Whether a converted barbarian, elegantly tattooed with woad, is likely to have been elected to the apostolical chair of St. Peter, forms another question,

^p Pseudo-Gildas in Cambreide, ap. Ussher.

^q Triad xviii This absurd production is full of ignorance, even of that little which we do know. Boadicea is confounded with Cartismandua.

^r The general idea was, no doubt, in the mind of the writer of this Triad, which runs thus: "Three Saints, Linus of the Isle of Britain, Linus Bran ap Llyr, Linus Cynedda Wledig, and

tion, of which the affirmative decision holds out fair hopes of Lambeth to our New Zealand neophytes. But we may infer, that there was never such a man as this Cyllin. That name is formed of cy and llin, and means "united by a chord or string," or else "being of a common lineage." Λβον in Greek is flax; and thence, a chord or string. Linum in Latin keeps both those meanings; and linea has the further meaning of series or lineage. The British and Gaelic llin have all the three meanings; which circumstance leaves reasonable inference, that it is one of the words introduced from the Latin. Neither does the flax culture belong to the savage state; peltries clothe the savage, the nomadic tribes proceed to the use of woollens, and flax and hemp come last. There probably existed no such name as Cy-llin for Caractacus to affix to his son; and it was invented long after the supremacy of the Romans had been established, and perhaps after its subversion.

Lleirwg Lleuver Mawr was grandson of Cyllin, and son of Coel; whom, however, the Chronicle of Kings makes son of Meiric, not of Cyllin. Coel (called a bard in Triad xci.) reigned over Britain, paying tribute to Claudius; and his son Lles succeeded him, whom others call Lleirwg Lleuver, and the Latin writers Lucius. This is all a romance. The house of Cynobeline (if there was any remnant of it) did not recover its authority over Britain, as tributaries or otherwise; but the country was gradually reduced into a Roman province. As there was no Cyllin, there probably was, for similar reasons, no Coel; and the true Coels are of much later date. For the Welch word coel (not in Gaelic), an omen or presage, charm or enchantment, or other object of superstitious veneration, seems to be formed from the Latin word coelum or caelum, what is hollow or concave, and, in the second intention, heaven. De caelo servare, is to observe omens and auguries; divinare is to observe things divine.

It is a reasonable supposition, that the one historical notice of Lucius, Beda's, given in a form discreditable to the learning of its venerable author, is not really historical; and that the tale was made up in Britain by somebody, who took the imperial brothers Marcus and Lucius to be the Roman emperor and the British king.—(H.)

No. IX. See page 66.

Geoffrey of Monmouth only miscalls Maximus by the name of Maximian; but the Historia Britonum has made two emperors, Maximus and Maxinian, out of that one man.

The remarkable assertion, that Consuls instead of Cæsars now began to reign, can only be explained as of Tyranni in lieu of more regular emperors. For such were Maximus himself, Marcus, Gratianus Municeps, and Constantine III., who all assumed the tyrannic purple in Britain. That accounts for the idea of a derogation; but the author of the Historia, consistently with his general statement, proceeds to speak of Valentinian and Theodosius as consuls.

The epoch of Maximus was very famous in the legends of Britain. In them he is called Maxen or Maxim Wledig, i. e. the sovereign of the land. Gwledig is literally terrenus, from gwlad, terra; and the title claims him for a native, as well as a Roman, sovereign. The Chronicle of the Kings describes him as being nephew to Helen, mother of Constantine, and son to her brother Llewelyn, and as being husband to another Helen, daughter of Eudav, a potent British chieftain. See Galfrid. v. cap. 8-9; Roberts's Tysilio, p. 98. Thus he was a Briton, though a senator of Rome. He is indebted for these legends to the important events of his reign. For then it was, that the foundations of Armorican Brittany were laid by the Celtic forces who accompanied him, on his expedition to Gaul, under the command (as a general tradition saith) of one Conan of Meriadawg in Denbigh. Then also the affair of the 11,000 virgins occurred; of which the death of some young women, going to join the Armorican colony (Colonia), seems to have been the truth.

There is a curious tale or mabinogi called Breuddwyd Maxen, the Dream of Maximus. He was emperor of Rome, the handsomest and wisest that ever reigned. Under him were thirty-two crowned kings, with whom he went a hunting. Being heated, he fell asleep; while they raised their shields for a fence around him, and a golden shield over his head. He dreamt that he visited a country, which he traversed, and reached a rough and barren district, beyond which he found a fine city, and in it a hall or palace of great splendour; and in the hall were two bay-haired youths, playing chess on a chess-board of silver, with chessmen of gold. They were dressed in black, with frontlets of red gold on their hair, and precious stones therein. At the foot of the column supporting the hall sat a gray-haired man on an ivory throne, with golden bracelets, chain, and frontlet, and with a golden chess-board on his breast, and in his hand a golden wand and a steel saw; and he was carving chessmen. A maiden sat opposite to him on a golden chair, arrayed in white silk and jewels. Maximus sat down in the chair beside her, and threw his arms round her neck; and, at that moment of his dream, awoke. He sent ambassadors in all directions in quest of her. And, at last, three of them found out the country, which was Britain, and the rough district, which was Snowdon, and the city, which was Aber Sain in Arvon; where they found the youths playing chess, the old man making chess-men, and the maiden in the chair of gold. They opened to her the suit of Maxen, and she said, that if the emperor loved her, he must come for her. So he came, and conquered the island, and went to Aber Sain, where he found Conan, and Adeon, sons of Eudav, playing at chess, and Eudav son of Caradoc in the ivory throne, making chess-men, and his daughter Helen seated. And he threw his arms round her neck. And that night they slept together. Next morning he asked her to name her dower, and she demanded Britannia from the British to the Irish sea, and the three adjacent islands [see above, cap. iii.], to hold under him; and three cities to be built for her, which were Caer yn Arvon, Caer Llion, and Caer Vyrddin. Helen caused roads to be made across the island from each city, and they were called the Roads of Helen the Armipotent. Maxen stayed seven years in Britain, and thereby (by Roman law) he forfeited the crown imperial; and they chose another emperor in his place. But he went and besieged Rome, and took it by the valour of Conan and Adeon and their Britons. Then Maxen gave them his army, to conquer territories; and they conquered and ravaged many provinces. But Conan would not return to his native country, and remained in Brittany, which is called Llydau Brytaen; and, since many flocked over thither from Britain, the British language yet remains there.”—See the Greal sev Cynnulliad o Orchestion, &c. pp. 289–297, London, 1805. Maximus is said to have had three sons, Cystennin or Constantine, Peblic or Publicus, and Owain or Eugenius, surnamed Minddu or the Blacklipped.—Y Greal, &c. p. 18. This Owain ap Maxen Wledig is reported to have been the first of those British kings who, after the resignation of the island by Honorius, ruled it independently of the Roman or Cæsarean system. See Triads, xxi. xxxiv. xli. liii. This name and tradition comes out of Bardism; and was not accepted by that other school of authors who framed the Trojan dynasty of kings. King Owain, son of Maximus, has been termed a saint; but he seems to have been more of a magician. He buried the head of Bran ap Llyr in the Tower Hill of London, for a talisman of defence to this island; but king Arthur indiscreetly revealed it. He was himself buried, both his head and his body, at Nanhwynyn, in the Forest of the Faraon (demons or spirits), and the said Owain slew Eurnach Gawr, and in the self-same forest Eurnach slew him.—Greal, p. 18. The mabinogi or legend of this obscure business seems not to be extant.—(H)

From the place, &c.—This curious sentence on the limits of Brittany has been, in the indication of the points of the compass, either taken from a better MS. than the printed copies, or more clearly enounced by the translator. The author describes Brittany as a triangle with its vertex due W., and the angles of its base N. E. and S. E. The Cruc Ochident or Tumulus Occidentalis is beyond doubt (as Bertram had surmised) the precipitous rock of Ushant, notoriously the due W. extremity of Brittany. Its modern name, Ouessant, though ultimately derived from Uxantus, sounds and perhaps is intended to sound like Ouest, West.

The N. E. angle is the stagnum, or bay of the sea, above (that is, north of) the Mons Jovis. The super verticem Montis for super Montem was either a mistake of Marcus himself, or of all his transcribers. The Mons Jovis is an extraordinary rock in the Avranchin, otherwise called Mons Sancti Michaelis in Periculo Maris, in French le Mont Jou. See Blondel, Notice du Mont St. Michel, p. 10. Avranches, 1816. There are two rocks; the Tumbelenia, or Tombelaïne, explained by some Tumba Helena, but more correctly Tumba Beleni, i. e. Hill of Belenus, the Celtic sun-god; and the loftier one, called simply Tumba, as well as Mons Jovis. The monastery or hermitage there was called Monasterium ad Duas Tumbas in Periculo Maris. Blondel, ibid. pp. 11–119. The Mont Jou received its appellation of Mont Saint Michel, from an apparition of St. Michael Archangel, which was seen there in A. D. 708. See Gallia Christiana, xi. p. 472; Ogcè Dict. de la Bretagne, i. p. 98, Nantes, 1778. In that year an inroad of the sea swept away, and changed in arenæ suæ formam, the forest in which the mount used to stand, and made it an island at high water; and St. Aubert, Bishop of Avranches, built a chapel there by command of the Archangel, which was dedicated in 709. See Blondel, ibid. p. 14; Gallia Christ. ibid. Apparitio S. Michael. ap. Mabillon, A. SS. Ben. sæc. 3. part i. p. 86. The Avranchin continued to be a part of the County of Brittany until the year 936, in which Alan IV. is said to have made over that district to William Long-Sword, Duke of Normandy; and to that province it hath ever since appertained. Recherches sur la Bretagne per Felix Delaporte, i. p. 95–6, Rennes, 1819. Therefore Dom Mabillon antedates the Apparitio Sancti Michaelis, when he states that narrative to have been written “ante sæculum decimum.” for its author does not consider the Mount to be in Brittany.

It remains for us to find the S. E. angle of Brittany at Cantguic^u. The Armorican meaning of the words cant guic is the hundred villages, centum vici. And I have no doubt, but the civitas Cantguic, or Centunvici, is that of Condivicium, properly Condivicium, of the Namnetes. Whether the ancient Gaulish name Condivicium^v signified centum vici, or did not, that etymology seems to have been attached to it; and may have contributed to introduce the spelling Condivicium. With Ushant for your vertex, and Mont St. Michel and Nantes at the base, you have the Brittany of the Historia Britonum. If Dom Morice has taken any notice of this passage, or the matters to which it relates, in his voluminous work, it has escaped my observation.

Mr. O'Donovan has justly remarked, that the translator mistakes crug, a hill or mound, ^u Rectè sic ap MSS. Petav. et Cotton. Minus rectè Tanguic, etc.

^v Adrien Valois supposes, upon uncertain grounds, that it referred to a confluence of streams.—Notitia Galliarum, p. 367.

The Britons of Letha, &c.—Britanny was called, by the Celts of Great Britain, Llydaw, and in Irish Letha, or Leatha, which words are expressed in Latin Letavia. Its derivation is from the Latin littus, and is equivalent in sense to the word Armorica; or, with the mutation, Arvorica, whence Procopius took his Ἀρβόρουχοι, de Bello Goth. 1. 12. Lez, in Armorican, is shore; and Lez ar mor, or ar vor, is shore of the sea; sometimes redundantly expressed lez en ar vor, which arises from making one word of armor, or arvor, littus in maritimis. Hence the noble family of Lez'narvor. See Rostrenen, Dict. François-Breton in Bord de la mer; Bullet Dict. Celtique in Letav and Llydaw. Others have improperly derived the word Letavia from the Læti, a sort of auxiliary militia, holding lands under the lower emperors of the West.

Nennius has a much stranger story, which our translator (if he found it in his copies) has done wisely to reject. He says that the British colonists, who married Gaulish wives, cut out the tongues of their wives, that the children might not learn Latin; and that, on that account, the people were called Lled-tewig, pl. Lled-tewigion, i. e. Semi-tacentes. A similar account is given in the Breuddwyd Maxen, but with less care in adapting the name to its etymon: "because of the women and their language being reduced to silence, the people were called the men of Llydaw Brytaen."—Y Greal, p. 297. That notion must have obtained some vogue; for we find Æneas of Britanny, the father of Emyr Llydaw, called Æneas Lledewig o Llydaw, i. e. Æneas Semitacens Letaviensis.—Bonedd y Saint, p. 30. 31.

Leatha was certainly used two ways in Irish, sometimes for Letavia and sometimes for Latium; from which some doubt and confusion hath arisen. See Mr. O'Donovan on the Hy Fiachrach, p. 410. In the Scholia upon the poet Fiech, in Colgan's Trias, probably by more scholiasts than one, it is explained both ways. That is the origin of the ridiculous fable of king Faradhach Dathi, nephew and successor to Niall of the Nine Hostages, having carried his arms into the Alps and been there slain. Like his uncle he attacked Leatha; and like him, met his death there; and his descents upon Letavia, when construed into an invasion of Latium, i. e. Italy, bring him, in due course, to the Alps. He was, by some accounts, shot with an arrow; and "the learned say that it was with the same arrow with which Niall of the Nine Hostages was slain."—Hy Fiachr., p. 23. Strange indeed! if the arrow which slew Niall upon the coast of Britanny, had found its way to the Alps. But, if they were killed in the same country, it might possibly be the same arrow. There the truth of the matter transpires; and it is not a little confirmed by the existence of Dathi's tomb at Rath Crogan, in Connaught. In the Battle of Magh Rath, or Moira, pp. 4, 5, it is mentioned, that Uguine Mor (King of Erin, anterior to authentic history) took hostages of Erin and Albany, and eastwards to Leatha. And if we understand these words as inclusive of Great and Little Britain, rather than of Italy, we shall give compactness to the story, and mitigate its improbabilities.—(II)

Severus the Second, &c.—All the Latin copies, after briefly introducing Severus the Second and Constantinus, say, “now we must resume the history of Maximian the tyrant,” i. e. Maximus, and so give the upshot of his attempts. But the translator has thrown Maximus' history into one piece. The ninth emperor is the tyrant Constantinus, who reigned at Arles in Provence. But it is less easy to say who is the second Severus; for Libius Severus of Lucania, Count Ricimer's puppet in 461, is clean out of the question.

In the enumeration prefixed to Marcus, he is called “alius Severus Æquantius,” p. 46; and the text of Marcus twice (pp. 62, 80) mentions Gratianus Æquantius as the Roman consul at the time when the Saxons came over; which, any way, is an anachronism, but must relate to Gratianus Municeps, and not to the elder Gratian. Nennius has it Gratianus (otherwise Martianus^w) Secundus, cap. 28. What can this word æquantius mean? It is said in the Chronicle of Kings, that Gratianus Municeps, with two legions, drove the Scots out of Britain.—Galfrid. 5, cap. 16. The headings of chapters to Nennius state (cap. 24), that “Severus II. directed another wall, of the customary structure, to be built from Timmouth to Rouvenes against the Picts and Scots.” Now if Gratianus Municeps caused the Severian or Timmouth wall to be repaired, he might, for that service, be called “ail Severys,” which word ail gives the double sense of another, or a second, and of being similar or equivalent to the first; or, in the words of the preface to Marcus, “alius Severus æquantius.” Certainly, the application of this word both to Gratianus, and to an unknown Severus occupying Gratian's right place in a series that omits him, strongly suggests their identity. Geoffrey's Latin steers clear of this Severus; but the Welsh copies, marked Tysilio and Basingwerk, introduce him upon the death of Gratianus Municeps (not as king or as emperor, but as commander

^w There was a Marcianus in the East three years later than the date in question, viz., 449; assigned, however, to that very year by Beda, i. cap. 15, and in his Epitome; but there never was a Marcian the Second. Mr. Stevenson prints der of an auxiliary legion), and set him to work upon the wall of Severus. Brut., p. 225; Roberts, p. 103. The interval between Gratianus and Gallio Ravennas (from thirteen to nineteen years), is sufficient to admit of both having laboured upon the wall; the former on the old Severian model, and the latter in solid masonry. I take Gratianus Municeps to mean Gratian of Municipium, or Caer Municip, that is, of Verulamium. See above, add. notes, No. I., p. v.

All that follows (briefly here, but more fully in the Latin) concerning the Roman expeditions to reconquer Britain, and their depredations, is false; and not easy to account for. The auxiliary legion sent by Honorius, and that afterwards led over by Gallion of Ravenna, to assist the Britons, form their sole historical basis.—(H)

The miracle of Germanus is thus recorded by Hericus Autisiodorensis from his recollection of the oral communications of Marcus Anachoreta, the original compiler of these British histories, with whom he had been personally acquainted. . . . “The shores of Gaul would be the end of the world, did not the isle of Britain, by its singular magnitude almost deserve the name of another world. This island, peculiarly devoted to St. German, acknowledges herself indebted to his sanctity for many benefits; being illuminated by his teaching; more than once purified by him from the taint of heresies; and, lastly, adorned with the lustre of many miracles which need not to be repeated, since they have been committed to writing by the study of noble doctors. One of them is especially famous, of which the knowledge hath come down to us through the holy old man, Marcus, a bishop of the same nation, who was by birth a Briton, but was educated in Ireland, and, after a long exercise of episcopal sanctity, imposed upon himself a voluntary pilgrimage; and being invited by the munificence of the pious king Charles, spent an anachoretic life at the Convent of Saints Medard and Sebastian; a remarkable philosopher in our days, and of peculiar sanctity. He was wont to relate before many, that German, the holy apostle (to use his own words) of his nation, when he was traversing the Britannias, entered the king’s palace with his disciples. It was then severe winter, and very inclement, not only to men, but even to cattle. Therefore he sent a message to the king to ask shelter for the approaching night. The king refused, and, being a barbarian both by nation and character, made light of the matter. Meanwhile German, with his disciples, remaining in the open air, stoutly endured the inclemency of the weather. And now, as the evening had closed in, the king’s swineherd, having returned from the pastures, was carrying home to his own cottage his daily wages which he had received at the palace. When he saw the blessed German and his disciples starved with the wintry cold, cold, he drew near, and humbly asked him to state who he was, and why he staid there in the severe frost? Having collected nothing certain from his answer, but being moved by the dignity of his person, he said, I beseech you, my Lord, whoever you are, to consider your body, and enter the lodging of your servant, and to accept such good offices as my poverty permits, for I see that it is of no small importance to mitigate the inclemency of the approaching night even in the meanest dwelling. Not despising the quality of the person, he entered the dwelling, and gladly received the services offered him by the poor man. He possessed only a cow and a calf; and turning to his wife he said, ‘Eh? do you not perceive how great a guest you have received? look sharp, then, and kill our only calf, and serve it up for those who are about to sup.’ She presently obeyed the order, and cooked the calf, and set it on the table. The bishop, abstinent as usual, desired the others to eat. Supper being finished, German called the woman to collect carefully the bones of the calf, and lay them upon its skin, and place them before its mother in the cow-house. This being done (strange to say) the calf presently arose, and, standing by its mother, began to feed. Then, turning to them both, the prelate said, ‘Receive this benefit by way of compensation for your hospitality, but without prejudice to the reward of your charity.’ All extolled the wonderful issue of the event with united praises. Next day the bishop went to the palace, and waited for the king’s coming forth into public. German received him as he came out from the interior, and, as soon as he was accessible to verbal reproof, severely asked him why he had denied him hospitality the previous day. The king was stupified; and, being astonished at the man’s firmness, refrained from answering. Then Germanus with wonderful authority said, ‘Go forth, and resign the sceptre of the kingdom to a better.’ And he hesitated: German immediately thrust him with his staff, and said, ‘Thou shalt go forth, and, as the Lord hath certainly decreed, shalt never again abuse the kingly power.’ The barbarian, awed by the divine power in the prelate, immediately went out of the gates of the palace with his wife and children, and made no further attempt to retain it. Then German sent one of his disciples to call forth the swineherd and his wife, and to the astonishment of the whole palace, placed him on the summit of royalty; from which time until now kings proceeded from the race of the swineherd, God wonderfully regulating human affairs through St. German. The aforesaid bishop, whose probity whosoever hath experienced, will by no means hesitate to believe his words, assured me, with the addition of an oath, that these things were contained in catholic letters in Britain.”—Hierici de Miraculis S. Germ. i. cap. 55; apud Ph. Labbe Novæ Biblioth. MSS. tom. i. p. 554-5. Compare Marcus, pp. 62-5; Nennius, cap. 30.

It is observable that all proper names of men and places are omitted here, Hieric being, no doubt, unable to retain them in his memory; consequently Britannia and her

king are mentioned generally in lieu of Powys and its local dynasts. Germanus visited Britain in company with St. Lupus in 429; and again in 447, accompanied by Severus. But all the accounts of his transactions with Vortigern have the character of fable. He died on the 31st of July, 448, being an early period of that ill-fated, but long-lived, monarch's career.

The Belinus of Marcus, and Benli of Nennius, is Benlli, surnamed Gawr, or the Giant, lord of Ial, a mountainous district of Denbigh.—Llwyd Commentariolum, p. 91. That Gawr is used properly for giant, and not for a mighty man, seems from Gwilym Rhyvel's mention of the gwrhyd (length or stature) of Benlli Gawr.—Englynion y Davydd ap Owain, v. 25. Nothing is known of him besides the fable in Nennius. But the grave of his son, Beli ap Benlli Gawr, a fierce warrior, is mentioned in the Beddau Milwyr, or Graves of Warriors, stanza 73 :

Proud his hand upon the long-bladed spear,
The grave of Beli ap Benlli Gawr.”

And some account of that grave is given in a prose narrative, printed in Y Greal, p. 239. The late Dr. Owen Pughe imputed to this son of Benlli a modification of the laws of Bardism.—Preface to Llywarch Hên., p. lx. Welsh Dict. in Beli. But for this he has adduced no authority beyond his own assertions. Ralph Higden, in Polychronicon (p. 223), says: “ In Legenda S. Germani [i. e. in Heric's book] habetur quod dum Vortigernus hospitium S. Germano denegaret,” &c., stating the affair precisely as in Heric, except that where Heric names the king generally, he puts in the name of Vortigern. Both alike derive the kings of all Britain, not of Powys, from the swineherd. It is remarkable that this Cadell Dwrnluc was the founder of a line of Powysian princes, and that Cadell, second son of Rodri Mawr, and father to the law-giver, Howel the Good, obtained Powys in the famous division of Wales by Rodri Mawr. Yet this doth not arise from any confusion of the two men; for Cadell ap Rodri Mawr had not been dead forty years in 946, when the last edition of the Historia is dated; nor was he yet born, “quarto Mervini regis,” when the first was compiled. For a sample of the ancient genealogies in the Cambrian Biography, Cadell reigned about the close of the fifth century (p. 31), Vortigern died in 481 (p. 168), yet Cadell was son of Pasgen, son of Rheiddwy, son of Rhuddvedel, son of Cyndeyrn or Catigern, son of Vortigern! The age of puberty must have been early in those days. Other genealogies, contained in a MS. of the tenth century, make Cadell Dwrnluc father of Categirn, and grandfather of Pasgen, and son to one Selemiawn. But Categirn and Pasgen are now universally regarded as two sons of Vortigern. So little consistency do the boasted Cambrian genealogies possess. See Cambr. Quart. Mag. iv. pp. 17, 21.

The miracle of the calf is one of a class well-known in the hagiography of these islands. St. Patrick brought to life five cows that were evisceratæ.—Jocelyn, cap. 9. Having banqueted with his disciples upon Bishop Trian's cow and calf, he brought them both to life again, lest the bishop should be in want of milk.—Vita Tertia, cap. 63. A visitor to St. Columba ate a whole sheep for his dinner; but Columba collected the bones and blessed them, and so completely restored the sheep, that a large party made a second dinner of it.—O'Donnell Vita Columbæ, ii. cap. 16. A poor woman slaughtered and roasted her only calf for St. Bridget's supper; but she restored it to life.—Cogitosus, cap. 27. St. Finnian of Clonard restored a calf on which he and his followers had supped; and St. Abban one which the wolves had devoured.—Colgan, A. SS. xxii. Febr. p. 396; xvi. Mart. p. 611. St. Fingar and his 777 companions feasted on a poor Cornish woman's cow, and then he resuscitated the skin and bones.—Febr. xxiii. p. 389.—(H)

Let his blood be sprinkled, &c.—The practice of auspicating the foundation of cities, temples, or other solemn structures, by human sacrifice, is not known to me as of any remote antiquity. Johannes Malala, a compiler of the ninth century, gives this legend of the foundation of Antioch by Seleucus Nicator: "In the plain opposite to the Silpian mountain . . . he dug the foundations of the wall; and sacrificed by the hands of Amphion, his high-priest and mystagogue (τριστοῦ), a virgin named Æmathe, between the city and the river, on the 22nd day of the Artemisian month, which is also May, at the first hour of the day, about sunrise; calling ἀντήν [HER, or IT?] Antiocheia, after the name of his own son, Antiochus Soter. Presently he built a temple, which he dedicated to Jupiter Bottius, and diligently erected formidable walls, Xenaus being his architect. He also erected upon the banks of the river a brazen pedestal and statue of the sacrificed virgin, as the Fortune of the city; and offered sacrifice to her as the Fortune."—p. 256. Subsequently the same Nicator laid the foundation of Laodicea in Syria. Having slain a wild boar, he dragged its body round a certain space of ground, and dug the walls according to the track of its blood; "having also sacrificed a pure virgin, by name Agave, and erected to her a brazen statue, as the Fortune of the city."—p. 259. Of these statements a certain Pausanias Chronographus appears to be the authority; and no reasonable doubt can be entertained, that they were fabulous, and founded upon the magical doctrines to which that lost and unknown writer seems to have been much addicted. From this we collect, that the human victim immolated upon such occasions was rewarded with deification and worship, and accounted a sort of tutelary deity of the place. Merlin was to have been the Τύχη of Vortigern's edifice. But the narrative in Nennius has this distinction, that repeated failures failures had shewn the necessity of some piacular rite; wherein it more nearly agrees with the legend of St. Oran of Iona. "The chapel of St. Oran stands in this space, which legend attests to have been the first building attempted by St. Columba. By the working of evil spirits, the walls fell down as soon as they were built up. After some consultation it was pronounced, that they never could be permanent till a human victim was buried alive. Oran, a companion of the saint, generously offered himself, and was interred accordingly. At the end of three days St. Columba had the curiosity to take a farewell look at his old friend, and caused the earth to be removed. To the surprise of all beholders Oran stood up, and began to reveal the secrets of the prison-house; and particularly declared that all that was said of hell was a mere joke. This dangerous impiety so shocked Columba that, with great policy, he instantly ordered the earth to be flung in again. Poor Oran was overwhelmed, and an end for ever put to his prating. His grave is near the door, distinguished only by a plain red stone." Pennant's Second Tour in Scotland, ap. Pinkerton's Voyages, tom. iii. p. 298. We may learn how deeply-rooted this idea was in the islands, by finding it in both the nations and languages, and ascribed to such different persons. As to St. Odhran or Oran, that he died naturally or by visitation of God, appears in Colgan's Latin excerpta from the unprinted Irish work of Magnus O'Donnell, lib. ii. c. 12. Some account of that saint is also known to exist in the Leabhar Breac, fol. 17.—(H.)

Magh Ellite.—The Campus Electi in the region of Glewysing; which region is otherwise the hundred of Gwynllwg, in Monmouthshire. In the sixth century one Einion was king of Glewysing. See Liber Landavensis, pp. 129, 379. In the reign of Alfred it was governed by Hoel ap Rhys, and considered distinct from Gwent. Asser Vita Alfredi, p. 15. It is supposed to be named after Glywys, the father of St. Gwynmlyw the Warrior, and grandfather to St. Catwg the Wise, and to St. Glywys Cerniw, who founded the church of Coed Cerniw^x in Glewysing. See Rice Rees on the Welsh Saints, p. 170. The place called Bassaleg is said by Mr. Roberts to be written in Welsh Maes-aleg, i. e. Plain of Aleg; which he conjectures to be the Campus Electi. His conjecture has the more force, from his seeming quite ignorant where Glewysing was, and that Bassaleg was in the heart of that district. Roberts's Ant. p. 58; and apud Gunn's Nennius, p. 166.

This is very well; yet I have some misgivings as to the prime source of all this. The Cor Emmrys was immeasurably more famous than the Dinas Emmrys; and it,

or the little hill which it crowns, was called the Mount of Election, possibly from the inauguration of kings. As it is said, in the Graves of Warriors, that Merlin Ambrose (surnamed Ann ap Lleian) lies buried in the Mynydd Dewis, or Mount of Election. —Beddau Milwyr, st. 14. But he was notoriously buried in the Cor Emmrys. Now, if the mount was that of an election, so also was the plain; and in that sense the Maes Mawr was Maes Elect. That plain was not indeed in regione Glewysing, but it was in the regio Gewisseorum or in Gewissing, the territory of the West Saxon kings, descended from Gewiss. Geoffrey of Monmouth calls Vortigern himself “the consul of the Gewisseans,” i. e. the ruler, by prolepsis, of what afterwards was Wessex.—Lib. vi. cap. 6. And when Aurelius Ambrosius desired Merlin’s aid (for the Chronicle makes two people of them), upon occasion of erecting the Stonehenge, he sent, precisely as Vortigern had done, messengers in all directions to find him, and they found him “in natione Gewisseorum, ad fontem Galabes,” viii. cap. 10. The writer was Archdeacon of Monmouth, in which county Glewysing is situate; but has in neither place any allusion to Glewysing. On the other hand the Welsh seem so baffled with this Saxon name, that the copy entitled of Tysilio entirely suppresses it; and the other copies translate it in the first instance Erging and Ewias, and in the second simply Ewias.—Brut Tysilio, pp. 236, 276. Lastly, where Geoffrey saith that Cadwallader’s West-Saxon mother was “ex nobili genere Gewisseorum” (xii. cap. 14), the Welsh translators all say, that she was descended from the nobles of Erging and Ewias.—Brut. p. 384. But Erging and Ewias are in Herefordshire, and have no more to do with Glewysing than they have with the Gewisseans. Hence I am inclined to attribute the transfer of this conspicuous fable into the obscure district of Gwynllwg and village of Bassaleg, to an inability to construe the geography of the Campanus Electi in Gewisseis, the great scene of Merlin’s and Ambrose’s fame. Indeed, the romance of Merlin plainly says, that Vortigern’s edifice was upon an eminence in Salisbury Plain.—Ellis Metrical Rom. iii. p. 213.

The red and white dragon of Dinas Emmrys were the hidden fates or talismans of Britain, originating with king Lludd, son of Beli Mawr, and his brother the enchanter Llevelys. It is scarce likely that a country with such great and central sanctuaries should have its fates deposited in so remote and obscure a place. In fact, it was not their primary seat. For Lludd, being distressed by horrid shrieks on every May-day night, and learning that the battle of the dragons produced them, measured Britain, and found Rhydyehain or Oxenford to be its centre, and there placed a cask of mead, and covered it with a cloth, over which the dragons fought, and fell into the cask and were intoxicated; and then he folded them both in the cloth, and buried them deep in Dinas Emmrys in Eryri.—Y Tair Gormes, in Y Greal, p. 244; Brut Tysilio, Tysilio, p. 169; Triad ii. 53. Therefore, the dragons originally belonged to some place accounted central. But this allegory cannot be mistaken. The night of the Calan-Mai was that very night on which Hengist and the Saxons slaughtered the British convention; the shrieks of the British dragon were those occasioned by that massacre, and the mead-cask over which the dragons fought and got drunk is the banquet, amidst the convivial orgies whereof so much blood was shed. But that was the twyll Caer-Sallawg, or plot of Sarum, of which the Cor Emmrys, or Stoneheuge, was notoriously the scene. It is therefore at that place (as I judge) that the hidden dragons of Lludd ap Beli were deposited.

There is another aspect to the prophecy of the dragons, which is perhaps the more esoterical and bardic of the two. By that, both the contending dragons are British. The white dragon (says the Roman de Merlin) slew the red one, but only survived three days. The red dragon was Vortigern, and the white represented his opponents, Ambrosius and Pendragon, who wrested the crown from him.—Roman de Merlin, fol. xxiv., xxv. Here two British parties are the dragons, and the Saxons not directly concerned; here also the colours are interchanged, the white or prevailing one being the bardic, and the red being that which the bardic party reviled. This theory seems to be in harmony with the eleventh Triad, in which the gormes or oppression of the kalends of May is distinguished from that of the Dragon of Britain; and the former expressly said to have been inflicted by foreigners from over sea, but the latter by the tyranny of princes and rage of the people.—(H.)

Gortigern, son of Guatal, &c.—Gortigern, son of Guitaul, son of Guitolin, son of Gloui. It is not known from what parents, family, or province this celebrated person came, though he reigned so long and so eventfully. A pedigree printed in the Cambrian Quart. Mag. i. p. 486, departs entirely from this one, and makes him son of Rhydeyrn, of Deheuvraint, of Edigent, of Edeyrn, of Enid, of Ednos, of Eddolaw, of Avnllach, of Avloch, of Beli Mawr. The truth has been hidden deep, and does not appear to me to transpire in either of these Welsh pedigrees. The Welsh call him Gwrtheyrn, from gwr, a man (and in second intention, a mighty man), and teyrn, a prince. Had this name signified Virilis Rex, the prædicate preceding the subject would have made it Gwrdeyrn, as in Cyndeyrn, Mechdeyrn, Aerdeyrn, and all compounds of which the first word does not end in d or t, like matteyrn, from mud or mat, good. Therefore Vir Regalis must have been the sense of Gwrtheyrn.

A curious variation occurs in the spelling of this person's name, of which the causes are not clearly apparent. Some, as Gildas, Marcus, and Nennius, put Gurthegirn, Guorthegirn, or Gorthegirn, which seems to combine the British spelling of gwr with the more ancient and Erse orthography of tighearn, a prince; while Geoffrey and most of the Anglo-Normans use the now received form of Vortigern, which is hard to come at any way. These difficulties are complicated in one of his alleged sons, whom the Welsh revered under the name of Gwrthevyr, a word of no facile etymology in their tongue. He, in like manner, is Guortimer or Gortimer in the Historia Britonum, and Vortimer with the others. This guor, turning into vor, seems to indicate that in his name, as in the former, gwr is the first element and not gwrth. But tevyr and timer are not easy to deal with. Again, the other son, whose name Catigern in Latin should be represented by Catteyrn (Battle-prince) in Welsh, is Cyndeyrn (Head-prince), being the same that they give to St. Kentigern of Strathclyde, and the exact equivalent of his. There is an obvious uncertainty in these names, such as doth not usually (if indeed elsewhere) occur in British names. This consideration, perhaps, weighed with Gale in thinking Vortigern was of a Pictish family. But, since he was of Gwynedd, he is most likely to have been born of an Irish mother, in the days when that people (under their own Ganval and Sirigi, and the Briton Einion Vrenhin) occupied the famous island of Mona. (Vide infra the notes on the Legend of St. Cairnech). He was accused of his friendship with, and support by, the Irish, as well as the Saxons; though the important upshot of the Saxon affairs has cast the others into shade. An ancient bard says (alluding to the massacre by Hengist, at the feast of the Kalends of May, and boasting that those national festivities had not thereby been crushed and abolished), “the knife-bearer shall not stab the sword-bearers of May-day, that is not [effected?] which was desired by the foolishly compliant master of the house, and the men of his affection, men of blood, Cymmry, Angles, Irishmen, and North Britons.”—Gwaed Lludd, v. 76. The bard Golyddan mentions him to have been confederated with “the Irish of Ireland, those of Mona, and those of North-Britain.”—Armes Prydain, v. 10. His son Pascent is said to have contended for the crown at the head of an army of Irish from Ireland, and to have lost his life in that conflict.—Galfr. Monum. viii. cap. 16. This does not agree with the account of Nennius, cap. 52, that the destroyers of his father permitted him to reign in duabus regionibus, viz., Buellt and Guortigerniawn; unless we suppose, that he first made that compromise, afterwards contended, with Irish aid, for the insular crown, and, perishing in the attempt, transmitted those lands to his family. For Celtic clanship did not admit of forfeiture, as feudality did.

Whatsoever Vortigern was, it is evident that he was a Briton of such power and influence throughout the island as no other man on record possessed, and maintained a struggle of the most protracted duration against the elements of foreign and domestic anarchy. Though it never appears in any Latin shape, the epithet gwrth-enan, perverse of lips or mouth, became habitually and thoroughly united to his name by his countrymen; owing to his issuing impolitic commands, or (as the Triads say) disclosing secrets.—See Beddau Milwyr, st. 40. Triad 45, series i. 10, series ii. 21, 53, series iii. Brut y Saeson, p. 468. Eræ Cambro-Brit. ap. Llwyd Commentariolum, p. 141. It deserves to be remarked, that Marcus, the author of the Historia, though setting forth the descent of Fermael from Vortigern, and fondly magnifying the fastness of Caer-Guortigern, nevertheless writes with all his country's prepossessions against that ruler, and appears, from the unanimity of the copies, to have introduced that nickname into his pedigree.—(II.)

Those who have handled the history of the Picts have not produced a satisfactory result. Father Innes, seeing that the name of Picti first appeared to the north of the Roman frontier, after the establishment of Roman civility in South Britain had converted the staining of the skin into a distinctive peculiarity and a conspicuous badge of independence, built upon that palpable origin of the name the too hasty conclusion, that both the divisions of the Picts were indigenous Britons. Herein he is followed by Mr. Chalmers, the meritorious author of Caledonia. Mr. Pinkerton, on the other hand, swayed by violent prejudices, has denied not only the British, but the Celtic, character of all the Picts. He wrote under a Teutonic mania, so extreme, that in one of its paroxysms he maintained the name of Scotland not to be taken from the Scots. The same critic framed a wild romance about some Teutonic Peukini, otherwise Piki, who travelled from an Isle of Peuke, in the Black Sea, to Norway, where they gave the name of Vika to a part of that country (now Aggerhuys), and thence came over to Britain as Piks, not Picts.

On the strength of this modern mythus, Pinkerton and his followers coolly term the Picts the Piks, and the language the Pikish; just as if there really were such names in the world. It is easy to fly half round Europe with a P and a K; to change P into V in Norway; and change it back into P when you reach the Orkneys. But it is less easy to get rid of the T. For every Teutonic form of the name Pict, that he is able to cite (Enquiry, etc. i. 367, 369, 370), and every Celtic form but one (the Picardach of Tighernach) has a T; and those Teutonic forms which soften down the name at all, only do so by dropping that very C or K, by aid of which the Peukins and pretended Piks became Viks.

But Vik itself is a mare's nest of his finding, and Norway had no such people as the Viks. The noun vik is sinus, a bay or inlet of sea; occurring also in numerous compounds. Vikr or Vik, in the oblique cases Vikina and Vikinni, was that bay between Sweden and Norway, stretching east and west from Sotannes to Otursnes, on which the ancient city of Tonsburg stood and stands, and at the head of which the Christiania-Fiord runs up to the modern Christiania. It is the Sinus, by way of excellence, sometimes distinguished as Eastern, Vik Austr. Schöning's maps to the Heimskringla give no such land or province at all, but write Vikina across the bay as above described. Though this noun¹ and its cases be certainly used, on many occasions, for the countries lying round the Vik, its true meaning is the bay itself, as any one may see, ex. gr., in Olaf Helga's Saga, chapters xlv. li. lxxxii. Nay, so much is distinctly signified by Torfæus himself, Mr. Pinkerton's authority; for his words are: "The southern coast sloping towards the Western Ocean, between that extremity of Danholm island which looks south-east, and Cape Lindisnes which looks south-west (forty-one miles distant from east to west), being excavated by a recess of the great sea, admits that huge bay called the Oslofiord, which runs up from thence to Oslo" [now Christiania], "and was anciently called Vik, and is now called by the Dutch sailors the Sack of Norway; and the great tract of land adjacent to this bay was also anciently called Vik, a name derived from it [ab illo sortitus nomen], which name was subsequently attached to the district of Bahus, which is called Vik or Viksida."²—Torf. Hist. Norweg. ii. cap. i. p. 28. Elsewhere he says, that Dal-vik was a province of three districts, surrounding the inner part of that bay of Oslo, which was called Vik, and its neighbours, the Vikenses.—Ibid. cap. ii. p. 31. Mr. Pinkerton but once ventured to refer to page or chapter, alledging Torfæus, ii. 18, in vol. i. p. 175, which happened to be a perfectly immaterial and safe passage. And no moral considerations deterred him from saying, "the whole northern writers call this country as often *Vichia*² as Vika, and have never dropt a single hint that this name was from vik."³—i. p. 179.

From vik, bay, gulph, or creek, comes vikingar, men of inlets, or pirates, "qui in eundem sinum vel portum (somu vik) unde primum solverunt populatum redeunt."⁴—Lex Antiqua⁵ Gulathingensis cit. Gumlaug's Saga, p. 303. See also Olai Wormii Mon.

²Regio Ad-sinûs-Latus, a name in itself sufficiently convincing

³This seems to be merely a cavil on the Latin orthography of modern authors in that language; even if it be a true statement.

⁴The Gulathing-laug, or Code of Guley in Hordaland, was enacted in the tenth century by Hako the Good; and the western part of Nor-

Mou. Dan. p. 269, and Haldorson's Lexicon in Vikingr. Opposite surmises are confuted by the names of the people from places ending in vik, as from Sandvik the Sandvikingar, or from Krossavik the Krossavikingar^b. But a man "or Vikinni," from the great eastern Vik, could not be styled a Vikingr, both because that name was general for all pirates, and because he might not be a pirate. And hence their compound name Vik-veriar, Sinûs-accolæ. Thus we see that there never were any Viks at all, and that Vik-men were only the men^c who dwelt on that particular bay.

As Innes made all the Picts of one race, so did he; and, with that view, he resorted to such phrases as "the Caledonians and Piks were all one," disguising in some places, what he puts forward in others, that the Caledonians were only one portion of the Picti. Mr. Pinkerton also constantly assumed, that the Caledonians were the northern, and the Vecturiones the southern division; upon no better authority than the pages printed by Mr. Charles Bertram, under the assumed name^d of Ricardus Corinaeus. The following passage, "Dicaledones and Vecturiones, the former certainly the Northern Picts bordering on the Deucealedonian sea," instances his want of ingenuousness; for Ptolemy's Deucealedonian commenced as far south as the Chersonese of the Novantes, which Solinus calls the Promontory of Caledonia, and we the Mull of Galloway. The fact appears to me to have been the converse. Since the Ptolemaic limits of the Caledonians were from the Murray Firth down to Loch Lomond, their relative position in the Theodosian age can never be inferred, either way, from Ptolemy; those are the tricks of history-making, subservient to system and self, rather than to external and objective truth.

Another main point with this systematist was to assume, against all historical inference, that the Belgæ of Gaul and Britain were not Gauls and Britons in language and nation, because the former had come out of a German stock; and that they were not of the Druidic religion, in the teeth of Strabo's clear and ample statements.—Geogr. vol. iv. p. 275–6. Whatever had been, or was even conjectured to have been, of way, in which that law prevailed, was itself thence called Gulathingsslag. See Hakonar Goda Saga, cap. xi., and Schöning's Heimskr. iii. p. 193.

^b The case of Jomsvikingar is different. That is contracted from Jomsborg-vikingar, and expresses the pirates, not the people, of Jomsborg; with no analogy to the places that are compounded with vik.

^c In his Modern Geography, grown bolder, Mr. Pinkerton gives us Pik, not Vik, for part of a German original, is presumed to have retained the German tongue and institutes: which, if true, must be equally true of the Irish Belgæ. But it is untrue; “Firbolii enim dicuntur Britannicè, et Danannæ Germanicè locuti;” the former half of which two-fold tradition, relating to an undoubted and never extirpated people, is not invalidated by the dubious^c character of the latter.—Ogygia, p. 10.

Norway! "This new name," speaking of Picti, "seems to have been native, Piks, or Pehts; and to have originated from a country so styled in the south of Norway, whence this colony had arrived."—vol. i. p. 146.

The Pieti or painted folk, beyond the Latin pale, were not all of one sort. Constantine’s panegyrist, who first names the free tribes after that peculiarity, mentions the Di-Caledonum (or^f Caledonum) “aliorumque Pictorum sylvas et paludes.”—Eumenius, cap. vii. And Ammianus says that, in the time of Count Theodosius, the Pieti were in duas gentes divisi, namely, Dicalidones et Vecturiones.—xxvii. cap. 8. The Calidones or Caledones were an ancient British tribe (“Quinte Caledonios Ovidi visure Britannos”) whose language was the British, for their name is such, and signifies inhabitants of forests; whether the great forest of the North be spoken of, or those Calidoniæ Sylvæ near the Thames, into which Cæsar pursued Cassivellaun.—Florus, iii. c. xi. Moreover we read, that of the People of Britain the “habitus corporum” were “varii, atque ex eo argumenta, namque rutilæ Caledonian habitantium comæ, magni artus, Germanicam originem asserunt.”—Tacitus Agric. cap. xi. But if they were then of a different tongue and nation, the argumenta or conjectures from stature and colour of hair would be superfluous, nor would the question have been merely one of origin.

When Severus made war, it was against the two greatest British nations then retaining independence, the Maiate near Hadrian’s wall, and the Caledonian farther north. Both were naked, with their bodies painted in various devices, and still made use of war chariots drawn by small horses.—Herodian, iii. p. 83, ed. H. Steph. Xiphilin, Epit. Dionis. lxxv. p. 1280–1, 1283. Reimar. These two denominations are probably equivalent to Campestres and Sylvestres; concerning the latter there is not much doubt, and mai, pl. meion, a plain, furnishes an etymon for Maiate. Thus the two names express the two modes of living ascribed to them by Dion, in the paragraph where he names them, viz., the nomadic and venatic, ἔκ νομῆς καὶ θήρας, and their two habitations, viz., rugged mountains and uncultivated plains, ὄρη ἄγρια . . . καὶ πεδία ἔρημα.—lxxvi. cap. 12. In Severus’s time two tribes were noticed as being picti; but, until a century

^c Which, moreover, was denied by Keating; according to whom Scot-bhearla was the language of all the colonies that ever came into Ireland till the English conquest. See E. Llyud in Scotbhearla. The conquests of the Ostmen are not regarded as colonies.

^f Some copies have “non Dicaledonum,” and others “non dico Caledonum:” which latter is not bad in point of context, though extrinsic reasons give a countenance to the former reading.

or more had elapsed, no tribe is known to have been named the Picti. At that later time the name of the Maiate tribe or Maatae, living in Galloway and part of Northumbria, had disappeared from the list of free and painted tribes. Yet, for all that, the South-Pictish territory does not seem to have been curtailed on the south, for Candida Casa, the first South-Pictish church, was on Maiate ground, and near the Severian wall. Meanwhile the other class of Picti Vecturiones was coming into importance, and cutting short the northern bounds of the Calidones; which in Ptolemy's day, seventy years before the war of Severus, extended from the Lælammonius or Lemaanonius Sinus (Lomond) to the Varar estuary or Firth of Moray.

Now it might be that Di-Calidones and Vecturiones were merely two sections of painted Britons, being of one race; as had been the case of the same Calidones and their Maiate allies. For the phrase, "in duas gentes divisi," readily admits of it. Yet it is probable, at first sight, that the Southern and Northern Picts were of different kinds. For the Southern Picts embraced Christianity at the preaching of a Briton, circa A. D. 412, and just at the expiration of the Roman power. But the contiguous nation of Northern Picts did not receive it until after A. D. 563, and then at the hands of Irishmen from Tir-Connell. The interval of 150 years between the conversions of contiguous states, with the distinct sources of conversion, strongly argues diversity of speech and blood. But we have a little more than conjecture, as both are known to us, in fact, but faintly.

In the Northumbrian age, or Beda's, we find much of the diocese or province of St. Ninia in the hands of those Irish who came afterwards to be termed Galwegians, which perplexes the matter. But in Ninia's time, for aught that appears, the North Cymmry country (regnum Cambrense and Cumbrense) was extended from Cumbria of Carlisle to Cumbria of Dunbreatan or the Strathclyde Wealhas, with no permanent interruption; and from its first mother church of Candida Casa or Whithern, to St. Kentigern's see of Glascu. We have vestiges of the Calidon Picts, whose country bordered upon the Strathclyde principality, sufficient to be recognised, and arising out of disputes too hot and violent to be considered fictions. From and after the middle of the sixth century, Maelgwn Gwynedd was reigning over the whole Cymmraeg tongue and nation, both titularly, and with rather more of authority than most of his race were able to exercise. He was engaged in disputes of which the nature is obscure and mysterious, and beside our present purpose, with the Caledonians or men of the great northern forests, which then (as we know) were called Celyddon. These debates, which ended in the war of Arderydd, fatal to the Caledonians, were more immediately carried on by Rhydderch Hael, son of Tudwal, son of Cedig, son of Dyrnwal, Lord of Alelyde or Dunbreatan, and Prince of the Strathclyde Britons.

The people of the Celyddon were under the rule of a certain Gwenddoleu ap Ceidiaw, a Cymry by name, and himself a bard, of whose work but a minute fragment survives. His principal bard was Merddin son of Morvryn, commonly called Merlin the Caledonian,

“ ——— de Albania	Sylvestris Calidonus
Merlinus, quæ nunc Seo 'a,	A sylvâ Calidoniâ.”
Repertus est binomius,	Ranolph. Polichron. 189.

Though some people said he was a native of Demetia or Dyved in South Wales. But that was merely a confusion between Merlin Ambrose (who was supposed, through an etymological error, putting Merddin for Myrddin, to have been born at Caer-marthen, and the Caledonian Merlin. This confusion of the two men probably originated with Geoffrey of Monmouth, whose Vita Merlini is pervaded with it; and who is thereby compelled to make his Caledonian vastly aged, having lived under a succession of kings, “ Ergò peragratis sub multis regibus annis⁶

“ Ad Kaermerthyn Demetia

Clarus habebatur Merlinus in orbe Britannus.
Rex erat et vates, Demctarumque superbis
Jura dabat populis, ducibusque futura canebat.”

⁶ Merlinus, p. 4, vv. 19–22, Londini, 1830, for Roxburgh Club; and ap. Gfrærer Pseudo-propheta, p. 365. The grounds upon which the Paris editors, Messrs. Michel and Wright, abjudicate this poem from Geoffrey, as given in Gfrærer's preface, entirely fail to persuade me. I have observed, indeed, that the cæsura of the short vowel in occurs in but one other instance, the word media in r. 749. But if this metrical colophon be an addition, it still is testimony of A. D. 1285. That Robert Bishop of Lincoln is complimented at the expense of his immediate predecessor Alexander, whom Geoffrey had extolled when living, and to whom he had inscribed his prose prophecy of Merlin, may either resolve itself into the nature of worldly gratitude, “ a sense of benefits to come,” or Alexander may have earned such praise by fair promises, and forfeited them by non-performance. I see nothing more about conquering Ireland in

There

Sextus Hibernenses et eorum nomina vertet, Qui pius et prudens populos renovabit et urbes,
(vv. 679, 680)

than had been said in the prose, “ sextus Hibernie mania subvertet, et memora in planitiem mutabit, diversas portiones in unum reduct, et capite leonis coronabit.” Neither can I discover a syllable about Henry the Second in either of them. Alan, Bishop of Auxerre, writing no later than circa A. D. 1171, tortured this prophecy into an allusion to him, by interpreting sextus to mean either Henry's sixth and bastard son, or some

There are no good reasons for supposing that the son of Moryryn was born very far from the scene of his adventures. His sister Gwendydd was the wife of Rhyddereh Hael, against whom he nevertheless fought in the war of Arderydd; and after the defeat and death of Gwenddoleu, he fled into the depths of the Caledonian forest, and from his wild and woodland life was called Merddyn Wylt. The contest was connected with the highest points of bardic theosophy, and waged between Gwenddoleu, the patron of Merddin, and Rhyddereh Hael, the patron of Kentigern and friend of Columkille; for these transactions nearly synchronize with the conversion of the North Picts by that missionary. Taliesin Ben Beirdd at the court of Maelgwn, and others of that order of poets and philosophers, vehemently supported the Caledonians against Rhyddereh Hael and King Maelgwn. That these Caledonians were a remnant of the Picts of St. Ninia's mission, and South Picts of Beda's history, appears not only from the ancient use of that name in Eusebius and Ammianus, but more immediately. For Merddyn Wylt, in his interpolated Hoianau, says at stanza 19:

“ And I will prophesy, before my ending,
The Britons over the Saxons by the energy of the Painted-Men, Brython dros Saeson Brithwyr a'i medd ”

His friend Taliesin, in a poem where he speaks of his bardic sanctuary or conventicle, other son yet to be born, but without the slightest allusion to the proceedings of Richard Strongbow, just commenced in 1169. Alanus in Merlinum, lib. iii. p. 102, ed. 1608. To make Henry himself the sixth Norman king, by counting in both Matilda and Stephen, would be less absurd. But the prophecy was both composed and translated into prose several years before his accession. In my humble conjecture, it received its present form in the Conqueror's reign, he being the sixth from Canute the Great inclusively; and the conquest of Ireland is a false prophecy, as others concerning the sixth king are.

But this poem is mainly from sources in the British tongue, and composed by a proficient therein. The names of Rodarchus Largus, Ganneda, and Peredur, the intimacy and fellowship of Telgesin with Merlin, the unique and otherwise lost records of Merlin's friend, Maeldin of Arwystli, and of Arthur's pilot Barinthus (Braint), not to say the whole action of the poem, is from such sources. Merlin's exordium, Celi Christe Deus! is in the pure British of his mystical sect, Crist, Duw Celi! or Crist Celi, Duw! For in the whole manuscript there is but one instance of a diphthong in common use (which in femina it neither was nor is) being omitted, viz., lyre for lyra, v. 104: and calum occurs seven times. But were there not other fine Latinists in Wales? Vel duo, vel nemo. Giraldus could have furnished the Latin, and perhaps could have got up the matter. But this is not the mere case of another Welshman, but of another figuring in eastern England, of another at LINCOLN, and patronised by two successive bishops of that see. The dedications to the two bishops of Lincoln, and the twofold allusions to one of them, which are alleged for disproof, are, to my mind, as coupled with the rare and peculiar qualifications of the author, a cogent proof.

ticle, the addwyn caer, as a ship on the sea preparing to sail away from danger and persecution, intimates an intention of removing it to the Piets:

“ Usual is the rising surge of the bards over their mead vessels;
 There shall be an impulse unto it in very sudden haste,
 The promise unto them of the green sword of the blue [or woad-painted] Piets.
Addaw hwynt y werlas o Glas-Fichti.—Mic Dinbuch^b, st. i.”

The gwerlas of the Glas-Fichti is the orchard of Merlin's 147 apple-trees, concealed in a deep and sweet glade of the Celyddon. After the restoration of the Celtic monarchy, the Briton Piets, or Calidones, again became fellow-subjects of the Britons, and were influential by their hatred of the Romans, and attachment to the superstitions they had nominally abjured. And these same were, as I lean to think, the Piets to whose support Vortigern is said to have been much beholden. However that may be, they were those of whom the existence was obscurely recorded in the Arthurian mythus. Therein a certain Loth, Lot, or Leo, was King of the Piets of Lothian (Lodoneis), husband to Arthur's sister, Anna, and father of Medrawd or Modred.—Ussher, Brit. Eccl. p. 357; Brut. G. ap. Arthur, p. 311. This Leo king of Piets was Llew, son to Cynvarch, son of Meirchion, and brother to Urien Reged and Arawn. Arthur gave Lothian and other lands thereabouts to Llew; to Arawn he gave Scotland; and to Urien he gave Reged. This unknown district (absurdly stated by Dr. Owen Pughe^c to have been in Glamorgan) was certainly in the north. It was (saith Brut G. ap. A.), “Mureif the land otherwise named Rheged ;” and so Geoffrey, sceptro Murfeusium insignitur, ix. cap. 9; which phrases seem to express Mureve, Morave, or Moray. But the Brut marked B has it parth a mur yr Eiff, “in the direction of the wall of the Egyptians,” i. e. of the Gaidheal from Scota and Pharaoh, but vulgarly the Piet's Wall; and the grant of^k Scotland to Arawn, and still more the proximity of Loch Lomond to Mureif, seem to prove that mur, wall, and not Moravia, was the original idea. Leo, King of Piets, was reputed the maternal grandfather of St. Cyndeyrn Gortwys, that is St. Kentigern of the Region of the Vallam or Rampart, Bishop of Pemrhyn Rhionydd (Promontory of the Rhions, whatever^l they may be), otherwise called Glas-cu: which admits of the interpretation Beloved of the Blue, i. e. of the Glas-Fichti.

The

^k For these writers name it, I conceive, in a more modern way; not as speaking of the true Dalriadha.

^l The Lexicographer Owen Pughe in his second edition, inserts the gloss, rhion pl. ydd. a sire, but offers no sort of authority, nor explains what he means by a sire. I guess the word rhionydd to be a northern form of rhianedd, ladies, as in the place called Morva Rhianedd.

The requiescence of the North Picts after the final departure of the Roman legions (“Picti in extremâ insulæ parte tunc primum et deinceps requieverunt, prædas et contritiones nonnunquam facientes”) is not attributable to change of character, being still savage heathen marauders, nor to decline of their power, which was growing, but to the dissolution of their league with the Di-Calidones, and re-union of the latter to the other tribes of Britons; by which means the Vecturiones were separated from the old Roman frontier, and the territory of their former allies to the south of the Grampians became the object of their conquest.—See Gildas, Hist. cap. xix. The Calidonians and Mæatians came to an end, having gradually lost their territory. The establishment of that other Pictish people, who in the eleventh and twelfth centuries were called the Galwegians or Gallovidians, in the heart of Cumbria or the North-west Wales, must have been a serious blow to the people of the southern Pictavia. The Irish annals mention desultory invasions of St. Ninia’s country by the Cruithne of Ulster in 682 and 702, and their establishment there towards the end of the eighth century.—Cit. Chalmers, i. 358. When Maelgwn of Britain, Rhydderch of Strathclyde, and Aidan M’Gabhran, King of the Scots, were fighting against the Calidonians at Arderydd, that tribe retained but a remnant of territory between the Clyde and the mountains of Argyle to the north of Loch Lomond; and we may suppose that the war of Arderydd was the finishing^m of them. Though Beda speaks of the Grampian hills as dividing the country of the Northern from that of the Southern Picts, it is obvious that he speaks retrospectively, and in reference to the period when the Calidones, driven from the Varar (the ancient Ptolemaic boundary of the vast Sylva Calidonia), yet held the Grampian barrier against the Vecturiones; and that only one kingdom of Picts was existing in his time.

We must pronounce against Father Innes, that the Vecturiones or North Picts were another race. His whole argument, reinforced by Mr. Chalmers’ researches, from the frequency of British names or roots in North-Pictish topography, is to be answered by the ancient reign of the Calidones from the Varar to the upper wall. For conquerors never fully obliterate the names of places. But, as the Calidonians were certainly indigenæ within all records of history, their hair and stature alone raising the suspicion of diverse origin, so the Picts of the most famous Pictish state are pronounced by all with one voice to have been, like the Scoti in Albany, “transmarina marina gens."—See Beda, i. 12; Nennius, cap. v.; Galfrid. Monum. iv. 17; Psalter of Cashel, cit. Ogygia, iii. 18; and the Irish tot quot. Mr. Pinkerton inconsistently maintained that the word Vecturion represented Vikveriar, i. e. the men of his Vika in Norway. While he was describing the Viks of Vika as constituting the entire of the Picts, and their name as being his very word Pik, he yet well knew that the Vecturiones were only one of the two Pict gentes opposed to Theodosius. But that appellation cannot be shown to have been other than a Latin one; and their transmarine origin, and vectura, or freightage in vessels, as opposed to the indigenæ, is probably expressed in it: Britanniam qui mortales initio coluerint, indigenæ an advecti, ut inter barbaros, parum compertum.—Tacit. Agric. cap. xi. If so, their arrival should have been so far recent in Theodosius' time, as to keep alive the tradition of their vectura, and also to account for their being unknown or obscure in that of Severus. That they came directly from Ireland seems agreed.—Beda, i. cap. i.; Chron. Sax. p. 1; Poem in Irish Nennius; Psalter of Cashel, &c. They were a tribe of Irish dialect (or language) and nation. That is in the nature of fact. Gwyddel is the Welsh word for Irish; and it is an adaptation to Welsh analogies of the name Gaidheal, the Gadelic or Gaelic. That word means Irish, and I have not learned that it means anything else. But the Picts of the Kingdom of Fortren Mor (as was its Irish appellation) were the Gwyddyl Fichti, or Gaelic Picts. The Brito-Irish legend of St. Cairnech adopts the name, with confirmation of its meaning, in that of Gaidheal Ficht, the fabulous son of Murchertach. Mr. Pinkerton and Dr. C. O'Conor were erroneously led to suppose that the Cruthenians of the Dal n-Araidhe in Ulster were meant by the Gwyddyl Fichti.—Inquiry, &c. i. 338; O'C. Proleg. cxxvi.; H. Lhuïd in Angliæ suâ Wallia Descript. pp. 14, 15, cit. ibid. But those were called, both at home and abroad, in Latin and in Erse, Cruthenii, not Picti. In fact (and fact is what we want) the Gwyddyl Fichti were the Picts of Albany or North Britain, by whom Madoe ap Medron was detained prisoner in that country; "gan y Gwyddyl Fichti yn yr Alban."—Triad. lxi. p. 68. They were distinguishable from the Gwyddyl Coch, Red Gael, i. e. havingⁿ rosy cheeks, not blue tattooed cheeks; human cheeks, according to my derivation of ἀθηρωπός or ἀθερωπός, animal erubescens or vultu florido. The Gwyddyl Coch o'r Werddon a daethant i'r Alban, "the red Irish from Erin who came to Albany." were the Dalriadhans under Loarn and Fergus.—Triad. ix. They were a refuge-seeking, not a conquering tribe; but proved treacherous to those who admitted them

Nor is the idea confined to the cheeks; for we read,

Cum tu Lydia Telephi

them.—Triad. vii. On the contrary, the Gwyddyl Fichti, painted or dark-blue Gaidheal, were an invading tribe who came into Britain by force.—Triad. vii. It was against the Gwyddyl Fichti that Vortigern was obliged to hire Saxon aid.—Triad. xiv. 53. That they were Milesians, which is the equivalent of Gaidheal, appears in the legend of Milceadh Cruithneach, Milesius Pictus; who went over from Ireland to the Britons of Fortren, to fight against the Saxons, and defend Cruithen-tuath or Pictland. The Britons of Fortren are the Cruithnich in Britain, as opposed to those in Ireland; and, if the former continued to receive succours in emergency from the latter, we may the more easily understand that their vectora was fresh in remembrance. That both the peoples, that in Ulster and that in Fortren, had in Irish but the one common name of Cruithneach, and long after the usage which gave the name was abandoned, is a fact most opposite to the theory of their distinct origin. All this is old fact, not modern etymologizing. They were Gwyddyl Fichti, of a fabled connexion with one Gaidheal Ficht; the plain upshot of which is, that they spoke the Gwyddeleg, and not either the Cymmraeg or the Saxon.

Nor is this deficient in verbal harmony with the common legend that they came from Scythia, i. e. from the land of the Scuit, for Scuit Fichti, Milceadh Fichti, and Gwyddyl Fichti, would all be synonymous; and the story of the Cruithnich from Scythia is just such another frigid etymologism, as that of the Scuit from Scythia. There is no good standing place, even for credulity, to set up a primæval tradition from the true Scythia of the East. Because the tenor of their legend, that they were Agathyrsi descended from Geleon son of Hercules, betrays the derivation of the whole story from Virgil's lines,

mixing ignorance with their learning, and bending two tribes into one. Whatever the word pictus meant of the one it meant of the others also, for Geloni and Agathyrsi were half-tribes (as it were) tracing their origin from two brothers, sons of Hercules. It was anciently interpreted three ways: wearing painted cloaks, having the hair only dyed blue, or having both the hair and body stained. The second is the sentiment of Pliny. It is not a certain fact that these Scythian tribes ever wore a stained or stigmatized skin. See Servius in Æneid. iv. 146, and Salmasius in Solinum, p. 133.

When Beda was writing, five tongues were spoken in Britain, English, British, Scottish, Pictish, and Latin; therefore the Gwyddeleg or Gaelic, and the Gwyddeleg Ficht were not the same. But that is consistent with a modification of dialect from long separation.

separation, admixture with Britons, and other causes. Without reverting to that remote truth, quite unconnected with Beda's thoughts, of the primitive identity of British and Scottish, it is otherwise manifest, that Beda included, as languages, such changes of dialect as sufficed to impede communication. For if Pictish were Teutonic, then English and Pictish were but two dialects; and if it were Cymraeg, then British and Pictish; so that, quæcunque viâ datâ, two of Beda's tongues were nearly related. In the biographies of St. Columkille, the converter of the Picts, a solitary allusion is found to the diversity of Gaelic and Pictish, where it is said that a certain plebeian family of Picts, hearing him through an interpreter, believed.—Adamnan, ii. cap. 32.—Vide contra, iii. cap. 14.

Pinkerton, and his follower, Dr. Jamieson, relied upon the list of kings as a source for Teutonic etymologies.—Inquiry, &c., i. 287–312; Etym. Dict. i. p. 35–41. By raking together Teutonic syllables, choosing such various readings of names as suit best, and assuming common etymologies from either source to be from that of their choice, a show of etymological history is set up against real and traditional history. But quite enough appears in this catalogue of kings to confirm, if not to demonstrate, the premised facts. What can we think of one who will contend, that Keniod or Cinedh, in the Latin Kenethus; Elpin, in Latin Alpinus; Wurgest or Vergust, in Latin Fergus and Fergusa; Ungust or Hungus, in Latin Oengus or Aongus; Canul or Conal; Uven, Eoganan, Eoghane or Owen; Vered, Ferat, Ferach or Feredech (Pheradach, in the signatures of the Pictish princes to King Ungust's Charter of Kilremont); Donell, Domnell, Dommal, in Latin Donaldus; Nectan or Neactan, Fidach, Fodla, as well as Cruthen or Cruthine, the first name on the list, are not from the Irish nomenclature? The seventy-fourth king of Picts is Uven, alias Eoganan; but Adamnan mentions Iogenanus presbyter genere Pictus, ii. cap. ix., and afterwards, iii. cap. v., Eogeanus nephew to Aidan, king of Scots. Phiachan, from Fiach, and Duptaleich, seemingly allied to Dubhitch or Dubhdaeth, and Glummerath or Glunmar, one of the various names formed upon glun, a knee, occur, together with Angus,

° The same author, with some ingenuity, pretended that Ungust, son of Vergust, when he overran the petty kingdom of Arregaithel or Scots, made an end of the Dalriadha dynasties of Loarn and Fergus, and set Pictish princes over it. But he drew down upon himself the absurdity of contending, that the Erse names of all the Scots kings after 743 were those of German Piks and Viks, ex gr. Aodh, Donal, Fergus, Conal, Angus, Eoganan, Alpin, Kenneth, Domhnal, Maolcholuim, Macduibh, Donnchad, and Macbeth! Nay, Mr. Pinkerton, after deriving Malcolm (the well-known contraction, if not rather nominative formation, of Maolcholuim) from mal, speech, and kom, a man, coolly proceeds to spell it upon all occasions Malcom; finding Teutonic etymologies for words of his own making.

Angus, Nectan, and Bolge, among the royal witnesses to the charter of Kilreumont. About the year 414 the name of Drust or Drost, Drustan or Drostan, came into use among the Pictish princes. Under the first of the nine Drusts, Ninia and Patricius are said to have converted British Pietland and Ireland. Whatever the name means, it is the same as the Cruthnechan Trosdan^p of the Psalter of Cashel. O'Conor's Keating, p. 121. Upon the whole I account it clear, from their names, that they were Gwyddyl, or an Erse people. And where we find Feradach changing into Vered, Fergus into Wurgest, and Eoghan into Uven, we need not wonder that St. Columkille and the other emigrant monks of the Kinel-Conaill, who seem to have met no impediment of discourse at the Pictish court, should have failed in making themselves understood to "the plebeians" of some districts without interpretation. The reader need only compare the opposite columns of Welsh and Cornish in Lhuyd's Archæologia, pp. 251-3, to appreciate the impediments arising from dialects, even in languages of the most undisputed identity. The Gwyddyl Fichti formed the main body of the ancient Albannaich, or people of the kingdom of Albany, of whom the Highlanders are the remnant; the whole of that body, except so many clans as lay west of the Drumalban hills, in Argyle, Lorn, Knapdale, Cowel, and Cantire. And when those hills divided two hostile states (now united 1000 years) the difference of dialect was more perceptible.

The following historical fragment, in the form of a bardic prophecy, is now inexplicable; but seems to belong to the ninth century, when the Northmen, or men of Norway and Denmark, had obtained a footing in these islands. It is one of the few documents of a forgotten dynasty, and is worth placing on record, for the chances of future illustration :—

 Shall not be estranged from prosperity.
 Till [in] the outcry of Menni

 Disaster [unto] Tyvy.—Arch. Myzgr. i. 73.

Everything here is completely obscure, especially the number five being repeated. Whether the sixth, seventh, and eighth join on to the five Gwyddyl Fiehti or the five Norddnyyn, depends on whether or not lines 5 and 6 be parenthetical. Some combination of the affairs of three nations, Picts, Northmen, and Welsh, is here indicated.

It is extreme fancifulness to dispute the meaning of the plain word Pictus, expressive of a notorious fact. That crotchet is as old as Verstegan, who says the Picts were not called of painting their skins, as some have supposed, but upon mistaking their true name, which was phichtian or fighters.—Restitution, &c. p. 124. This was Teutomania. But Dr. Owen Pughe, under strong Celtomania, invented in his dictionary the gloss, “Peithi, the Picts,” and explained it “people of the open plain.” &c.; and this invention Mr. Chalmers has chosen to adopt.—i. 204. They were, he says, “called Peithi, or Picti. Thus a Welsh poet of the seventh century says Glas Phichti.” They were called one thing; and thus they are called another! But our concern is with genuine, not coined words. The real meaning is shewn directly in Taliesin’s Glas Fiehti; and antithetically in the Gwyddyl Coch. Claudian, the courtier of Stilicho, had access to all information concerning the tribes, against whom his patron had a frontier to defend.

But indeed there were few phrases that could be used in that sense, and were not so applied. The Calidones were called by Ammian Di-Calidones, and the neighbouring ocean by Ptolemy Δουκαληδονίος, and by Marcianus Heraclæota Δουκαληδονίος, the Ducaledonian; of which the former, Di, expressed the pronunciation, and the latter the spelling, of Du^t, black. Brith in British, and Brit, in Irish, spotted, variegated, party-coloured

^s Here (as printed) Dyvi, but in the concluding line Tyvi; as appears from the mutations, Dd and D. The Tyvy is the large stream dividing Caermarthen from Cardigan.

^t The Finlanders who invaded Ireland were called the Fin-gall and Fin-gent, which name the Irish interpreted white strangers, or white Pagans, from their own word finn, white. By mere antithesis to those names, and not upon real grounds of colour, the Danes and Norwegians came to be called the Dubhgent, Black Pagans, and Dubhlochdonaich, Black Pirates.—

coloured, is the probable etymon of Britain, and hence brith-wr, a spotted man, a Pict; to which in the Hoianau is added the other epithet, black, brithwyr du. Equivalent to this was Brych or Brech in British, Brec and Breac in Erse, speckled, party-coloured. I have intimated above (p. 111, n.), that Agned Bregion, i. e. Brechion, plural of Brech, was meant by the Britons for Agnetum Pictorum; and Brechin, an episcopal city of the Picts, civitas Brechme of the Pict. Chron., is from the same root. So also is the name of Brychan or Brecanus, the legendary founder of Brechinia, Brecheiniawg, or Brecknock, whether in the like sense or not. The Manks were not only an Irish people, but probably were Crutheni, or Ulster Picts. For the rebellion of the Ultonians against Cormac MacArt, in 236, was chiefly of the Cruithniu under Fiach Araidhe; and in 254 he expelled a portion of the Ultonians, and gave their territory to his son, Cairbre Riadha, from whom the Dal-Riadan, Dalreudin, or Rout district (the cradle of Scotland) took name. From this act he was surnamed Ulfada, or Banisher of the Ultonians; and they settled themselves in Manand or the Isle of Man. Tighern. in annis. That island, of whose early and Celtic history scarce another vestige remains (see above, No. III. p. vii.), may be regarded as having been a colony of Cruthenians, driven out of North Ulster by the Riadans. Mervyn, King of Man, whom Welsh pedigrees have derived in the female line from the princes of Powys, and who married Essyllt^u, heiress of Conan Tindaethwy, King of Wales, is called in the interpolated Hoianau, st. 36, Mervyn Vrych o dir Manau, not by reason of freckles on his skin, but as claiming a descent from, or reigning over, Picts; for the Gwasgargerdd, equally ascribed to Merlin the Calidonian, speaks of the “brithwyr du o Manau,” black-spotted men of the Isle of Man. Man hath scarce any history until the ascendancy of the northern vikingar. But a great annalist speaks of Picts in that country, in 711, more than 100 years before Mervyn Vrych. Strages Pictorum in v campo Manand^u, ubi Findgaine Mac Deleroith immaturâ morte jacuit.—Tiq. in 711, p. 225, O’Con.

^w The Ulster Annals, at 781, speak of Drust the Eighth as “rex Pictorum citra Monot,”

O'Con. In the Pictish catalogue, (see above, sect. xxxi.) we read, "Guidid Gaeth Breatnach," a Briton, but the Pictish Chronicle gives Guidid Gaed Brecah; which variations do all resolve themselves, one way or another, into Pictus. Nectan the First has several surnames, such as Kellemot and Thalthamoth; but most usually, and in the Pictish Chronicle, Morbet. In this Irish document that unknown word is altered, and, I believe, corrected, thus, Neactan Mor Breac^x, the Great Pict. The case of Domhnall styled Breac, Brec, Bric (Dovenald Varius of Cron. Reg. Scot. Innes, ii. 789), prince of the Dalriads or Scots, and son of Achy, is full of obscurity. He bore the surname whilst living; as Adamnan says, "temporibus nostris . . . Domnallo Brecco" &c. iii. cap. v. At his father's death in 622 he was adult, and fell in the battle of Strath-Cawn or Ceirinn, fought against Hoan king of the [Strathclyde] Britons, in December 642. — Tighern. in anno. Yet Ulster Annals, after stating the death of plain Domhnall (not D. Brecc as in Tig.) at A. D. 642, say, at A. D. 685, "Talorg Mac Aicthaen et Domhnall Brecc Mac Eachadh mortui sunt." The name Talorg is exclusively Pictish; and the author seems as if he considered D. Brec, son of Achy, to be such also. How he recovered the crown of his father (which had passed into another family after the overthrow of his brother by the Irish Cruithnich), and what connexions, either Pictish or Cruthenian, he may have had in the female line, is matter buried in the darkness of those times and countries. But he fought at Moira in conjunction with Suibne, prince of the Crutheni, and had fought in 621 conjointly with Conall, son of Suibne. If any credit be given to his longevity, and his dying together with this Talorg, his crown must have passed into the hands of the extranei of Adamnan (iii. 5), i. e. strangers to the lineage of Aidan M'Gabhraun, at or about the time of his defeat in 642, by abdication and flight into Pictland, not by death^z. Broicne, broice, broicean, are words of the same sense as breac or brec, and may explain the appellation of Broichan, the magus of the Picts. Adamn. ii. 33. which obscure phrase may signify "king of Pictland, Man excepted;" putting Monot for Monæda, Sed quære.

^y As to the two lines of the Gododin, vv. 743, 672,

"A phen Dyvnwal a brich brein a'i enoyn.
A phen Dyvnwal erych brein a'i enoyn," although erych may, perhaps, be the true reading of them, I cannot discover in those extremely remarkable passages of Aneurin any allusion to the battle of Strath-cawn and death of Dovenaldus Varius, king of Scots. There also are difficulties in supposing the author to have composed them so late as 641. The connexion of the names Dyvnwal and Domhnall is also unascertained.

^z Said to have included Down and the southern parts of Antrim.—See Dr. O'Connor in Tighernach.

others who were in Meath and Connaught, as well as those of Fortren Mor in Britain, are called from^a cruth, form, aspect, countenance, colour, complexion; and so the phrase would resemble our men of colour, or may signify men adorned with figures. Among the Dalaradian Cruthnich we hear of king Eochaid Laeb or Laib, which Colgan renders Maculatus; of king Aodh Brecc, who was slain in 563, with the seven Cruthenian clan-kings, by the Hy-Niall of Ulster, “vii righ Cruithneach im Ard mbrecc,” Cenfaelad cit. Tigh.; and of Aodh cognomento Niger; likewise we read of Congal M’Mealeanfaith Brecc Fortren, Ann. Ult. 724; which were not improbably tribule, rather than personal, appellations, and analogous to Nectan Mor Breac. Of these and other such epithets more will be said in treating of this practice, as a superstition cherished in the ages subsequent to its desuetude.

But above all the name of Bruide or Brudi, borne by so many kings of the Gwyddyl Fichti, deserves observation; because it once was official or titular, and common to all, like Pharaoh or Augustus. The Pictish Chronicle says, upon the name of Brudi the First, “a quo triginta Brude regnaverunt Hibernian et Albaniam per 150 annorum spatium;” and adds their private or personal names. Now that national name, spelt in this and other Irish works Bruide, elsewhere Bruidi, Brudi, Bridius, &c., is but the Erse word, bruid. spina, quodvis cuspidatum; bruid, confodere; bruid, vulnus gladio vel cultro factum. What Isidorus Hispalensis questionably says of the name Scoti may be truly said of this name: “propria lingua nomen habent a picto corpore, eò quòd. aculeis ferreis cum atramento, variarum figurarum stigmatè annotantur.” This was expressed in the title Bruide, Acu-punctus, the Pict, a name common to a long series of kings, and never wholly disused. If these thirty kings reigned over Albania, there will then be a double list of the kings of Fortren; which absurdity has induced me to analyse these statements. Bruide the First is the fifteenth king; and in thirty kings, counted from him, there occurs not one Bruide. But counting again from Talore

p. 96, n. 7; Mr. O’Donovan in Magh Rath, p. 39, note.

^a See Dr. Todd’s note above, No. II., pp. v. vi. Yet a modern author has been found to imagine, that the name is for cruitineach, hump-backed. To meet the absurdity of a nation of hump-backs, it is supposed that Daln’araidhe was a sort of hospital, whither the Picts sent “the infirm and deformed inhabitants of Argyle, to make room for the efficient Irish troops.”—T. Wood’s Primitive Inhabitants, p. 139. An elegant colony, and a probable theory. But unluckily the senders, i. e. the Picts of Fortren Mor, were Cruithnigh as well as the others, and, therefore, must also have been “crump-shouldered or humpy people!” The essay here cited contains many judicious remarks. But its author, like others, has missed the fundamental fact, that the Irish, being a British people, were, as such, a Pict people.

Talorc III. the forty-sixth king, the third is Bruide; from him the fifth is Bruide; from him again, the fifth; from him, the second; from him, the fourth; and lastly, from him, the eleventh. Thus, when it was merely a man's name, we find it recurring occasionally; but when it was titular to all alike, we find it entirely absent. Which evinces that the words, "Hiberniam . . . spatium" are superfluous and false, as well as the thirty^b private names; and that these thirty Bruides are simply the kings of Pictland from Brudi Bout to Talorc III. For it is obvious that men must be enumerated by their names, but need not be, and frequently are not, by additions of course; as we must say Trajanus, Hadrianus, &c., but need seldom add Augustus. The thirty Bruides end just fourteen years before the accession of Bruide II., that is to say, of the first king by name, and not by title, so called; and he was their first Christian king, baptized by St. Columkille. We may therefore suppose that it ceased to be the regal appellation when the increase of civility and approaches of Christianity had caused the actual practice upon which it was founded to fall into desuetude; and may accordingly conjecture, that Cealtrain Bruide, who died in 543, and was the last of the thirty, was also in fact the latest rex actu punctus. In almost all moral concerns the real beginnings precede the historical commencement; and as Palladius himself went ad Scotos in Christum credentes^c, so must Columkille ad Pictos. For even if he could have wrought what he did upon matter unprejudiced, date and situation shew the probability that Christian influences must have oozed into Pictland from Caledonia and Strathclyde, from Argathelia, and from Dalaradia in Ulster.

We now come to a brief but important corollary. The record of thirty-six kings anterior

^b These consisted of fifteen names, two of which seem to be lost, each followed by a repetition of the same with Ur prefixed, as Pant, Ur-pant, Leo, Ur-leo. Ur in Gaelic and Erse is new, fresh, young, again, a second time; allied to 1cp, after, succeeding. R1g ur, a new king.—Stewart's Exodus. cit. Armstrong. It is obvious to conjecture that Ur-pant was the Tanist of Pant, and so Ur-bruide of his Bruide. As tanist was used without limitation in the sense of second, the tanaistic battle or tanaistic captivity, for the second battle or captivity (see Tighern. in 495 and 980), so, conversely, the secondary king was the tanist of the primary, his actual coadjutor, and successor designate. This curiously formed list may hint to us another circumstance, viz., that (in the days of the thirty Bruides, or painted Picts) the Ur-bruide, during the life of his principal, bore his name, with the tanaistic prefix, instead of his own, when he assumed the primary crown. The fictitious character of these names appears, not only from the external history, but from the two first of them; one of which is the Anglo-Saxon name Penda (see Tighern. in 631, 639, 650), and the other is the British name Llew.

^c It was the same in the north of Europe, and the accounts of those qui ante religionem lege receptam in verum Deum crediderunt, may be read in Olaf Tryggvason, cap. cxx. et seq.

anterior to Drust M'Erp, in 414, is of slender authority, and tinged with manifest fable; and the historical era is there, upon solid grounds, considered to begin. But the first king in that series is Cruthne or Cruidne, which is equivalent to Bruide, and conveys the idea of tinctus or pictus, as the other of ponctus. Therefore King Cruthne and the first titular Bruide are identical; and if there were thirty-one such Bruides, that is thirty after the Bruide called Bout, it is rather identity of proposition than an inference to say, that there were thirty-one Cruthnes. Mr. Pinkerton's just reduction of the Bardic Pictish reigns to the standard of the Irish, Northumbrian, and historical Pictish reigns, yields the dates (approximately correct) of A. D. 28 for Cruthne, and A. D. 208 for Brudi Bout. Consequently either Bruide I. must go up to Cruthne in A. D. 28, or Cruthne must come down to him in 208; and, as bardic myths exalt antiquity, we shall choose the latter. Therefore it seems, that all the kings anterior to Brudi Bout are additions; that he was the planter of the Gwyddyl Fichti or Vecturiones in Albany; and that Cealtrain, the last ex officio Bruide, was only the thirty-first Vecturion king. That places the transit of the Cruithnechan or Gwyddyl Ficht colony from Ireland circa A. D. 208, in the reign of Con of the Hundred Battles, and nearly half a century before Cormac Ulfada drove the Cruthenians out of North Ulster in Manniam insulam et Hebrides.—Ogygia, p. 335. It is sixty-seven years (or some trifle less) after Claudius Ptolemy described the Caledonians of the Du-Caledon sea as stretching from Lake Lomond to the Firth of Moray; the identical year in which the war of Severus against the painted Maetae and Caledones began; and 159 years before the war of Count Theodosius against the Du-Caledons and Vecturions. By this reckoning, the Cruthnich of the Dalu'araidhe will have crossed over to North Britain some 290 years before their next neighbours of the Dalriadha, or Routs of Antrim and Coleraine (being the Gwyddyl Coch of the Welsh), followed their track and planted their settlement of Argathelia (Aimer-Gaedhal) or Scots.—See Cambrensis Eversus, ix. p. 74. This accords with the order of events, as laid down in the Duan Albanach, and in this book “Of the Cruithnigh,” by which Britain was first held by Britus (i. e. the Britons), then by Clanna Nenuidh (the Belgians?), and “the Cruithnigh possessed it after them, having come from Ireland, [and] the Gaedil after that, that is, the sons of Eirc son of Eochaidh.” See above, p. 127.

The advent and departure of the Cruthnich in the days of Herimon, son of Milesius, 1000 years B. C., which is a legend as ancient as Cormac Mac Cuillenan in the ninth century, is a pure mythology, and has made improper use of Pictish materials by bringing into the remotest origins those names of Drostan and Nectan, which did not come up among the Picts before the era of Ninia and Patrick. The fact, that the Picts of Albany came over from Ireland, is about the only one it yields us. But their their migration was evidently from the opposite and near coast of Ulster, where they had their abode. This is not only matter of reason, but of tradition. The text of the Colbertine Chronicle of Piets asserts, that the thirty Bruides ruled Hibernia and Albania, but that means the kingdom of Ulster, not all Ireland; and for evidence thereof we read, in Lib. Ballinote, that Bruide Cint (who was thirteenth of the thirty) was King of Ulster.—Ap. Pinkerton, i. 502–504. Nor are we in the position to affirm, that the Cruithne kingdoms of Daln'araidhe and Fortren Mor did not thus long continue to be one, after the fashion in which Celtic monarchies had unity. Since in 590, at the Synod of Dromecat, we find Aodh, the son of Ainmire, asserting, and then waiving at St. Columkille's intercession, the sovereignty of the kings of Erin over the Dalriads of Britain. “The Irish authorities,” says Mr. Petrie, “make Gede also King of the Irish and Scottish [North British] Piets;” and, though they absurdly make him son to King Ollamh Fodla, their tradition supposes the two Cruithenias to have once been one kingdom.—On Tara Hill, pp. 153, 154. We read in the present work that one Cruithnechan M'Lochit from Erin, meaning of course the chief of the Irish Cruitheni (see p. 127), flew to the succour of those of Fortren against the Saxons (sæc. 5 vel infra), which (not to mention its agreeing well with their allegiance to one Bruide or Cruithne) argues them to be the same people. Subsequent history shews them engaged in bloody wars against Argathelia, under its kings Eochaidh Buidhe and Kenneth Cear, but not against Fortren. It is obscurely intimated that Cormac Mac Art, having in 254 expelled the Cruitheni from the Routs of Antrim into Man and the Hebrides, did in 258 pursue the war into Albany and exact an acknowledgment of his authority.—Ogygia iii. cap. lxi.; Ogygia Vindicated, pp. 162, 163. If this were so it would increase the probabilities that the Cruithenian kingdom of Fiach Araidhe, slain by Cormac, and the infant colony of Fortren or Pictish Albany, were not reputed nationally distinct.

One of the paradoxes once accredited was, that the Cruithne or Cruithnich, descendants^d of Hir the Milesian through Fiach Araidhe, King of Ulster in A. D. 240^e, were at no time, in fact, any Cruithne at all; but were so called because the said Fiach was remotely descended from Loncada, wife of Conall Kearnach circa B. C. 12, and daughter to one Eochaid Eachbheoil a Piet of North Britain or of Man.—Ogygia, iii. pp. 190, 278–279. It may be remarked that those Dalaradians, or men of Araidhe, who were not Cruithenians (see Tertia Vita Patricii, cap. 58; C. O'Conor in Tighern, p. 96; Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. vol. i. p. 218), should seem equally connected through Fiach with this Eochaid. But if the historian of the Ogygia could believe that a nation could be called Men of Colour, or Men of Figures and Devices (Picts) during a matter of 600 years, for no other reason than because the chieftain, said to have founded their community, traced his origin, and that at an interval of two centuries and a half; from the daughter of a Pictish subject, he must have been a logician callous to the non causa pro causâ. Were the founders of the Connaught Crutheniâns^f, and of divers others, also descended in the eighth generation from a Pictish lady? This is but a sample of that bulk of lies with which Fintan and other bards of the sixth century fed the awakened curiosity, rising pride, and unbounded credulity of their countrymen. It is so far germane to the legend of Heremon and the Cruthnich, that it dissembles the condition of the ancient Irish, and assumes that people not to have themselves been painted, neither all nor some. But such is neither the reason, nor is it the fact of the case.

Ireland was peopled mainly, if it was not exclusively, from Britain, in the times before history. But the woad-staining was general in Britannia; throughout all Britain (omnes Britanni) in Cæsar's time, and throughout all free Britain in Severus's time. Therefore it is apparent, that Ireland should have been colonized and possessed by tribes delighting in such adornment. So that Dr. Lanigan, when he said "how any of those Crutheni or Picts came to be settled in Ireland is not easy to discover," should rather have set himself to discover how any others but Crutheni could have come thither. Ancient writers neither say that the Irish were painted, nor that they were not; until we come to the days of Valentinian the First, or rather of Julian, where the mention of Scoti et Picti may be thought by some to insinuate that the former were not so. But Julius Agricola did report thus much of the Hiberni, that "ingenia cultusque hominum non multum a Britannia differunt."—Tacit. Agric. cap. xxiv. And the usage in question was so far the most conspicuous cultus, of any that the Britons used, as to make these oblique words little different from direct averment. But when the dry tale of Ireland's colonization in British coracles was replaced by the romantic and manifold impostures of Fintan the immortal, and all that school, its inseparable adjuncts of course perished with it.

Though we must infer the existence of this practice, the chronology of its gradual disuse is lost; as indeed are nearly all such real facts, ill compensated with tales of Ogygian date and Herculean audacity. Various causes of desuetude may easily be imagined:—I. The example of such desuetude, and of civility, offered by all Britain

^f It should be remembered that the pretended Lonncada, that woad-stained Helen of rape and war, flourished some two centuries before the south of the walls. II. That knowledge of other nations and manners, in which the Irish of the piratical age must have exceeded their stationary progenitors. III. The gradual change wrought by the proximity of a fresh moral power, working a doubt or disregard of old things before the adoption of the new ones; as we see Brahminism shaken, though not abolished, and its suttees dying away. In these ways, or in some of them, it came about that the Niallian marauders were distinct in appearance from the Ducalidon Cymmry, and Vecturion Gwyddyl; while the self-same cause (viz. the desuetude elsewhere) which dubbed the Caledonians Picti, had dubbed those Dalara-dians and some other tribes Crutheni. The conquest of Ulster by Cormac O'Cuin, son of Art, may be regarded as an epoch in the decline of that custom, as his reign forms an epoch in the general civilization of his country.

Irish history and mythology, when analyzed, are not really in any other story. Ireland peopled Fortren with Cruthenians. East Ulster was always in part occupied by them; "the Cruthenians in Uladh and Moy-Cobha."—Ancient Topogr. from Books of Glendalough and Lecan, by C. O'Connor, Sen., in Coll. Hib. iii. 672. And there were others, less known, in the parts of Connaught near Boyle. "Conaght, first called Olnemacht. . . . the Cruthenians, or painted men, in Moy-Hai, extending from Loch Ke to Bruiol, and to the Shannon."—Ibid. The royal province of Meath also contained a real toparchy of Crutheni, for it is said in Tigh. A.D. 666, "Eochaidh Iarlaith ri Cruithne Midhi mortuus est." Again, other Crutheni held a portion of the diocese of Derry, where the district of Dun-Cruthninia, since called Ardmagilligan, and St. Beoadh's ancient episcopal church of Dun-Cruthen, or Dun-Cruithne, now Dun-crun, were situate. See Vita Septima Patricii in Trias Thaum. p. 146; O'Donell, Vita Colum. i. c. 99; and Colgan in eund. pp. 451, 494; Martyrol. Dungall. cit. ibid.; S. Beatus in A.SS. Hib. viii. Mart. p. 562. Which makes several^e recorded Pietlands in Erin, besides any others of which the record may have perished, and independently of the mythus of the Temorian Picts.

That mythus is of a large import. It professedly belongs to the first origins of the existing Irish people. It shews you the Cruthnich powerful in Erin in Herimon's own days, winning his battles, and preserving him from his enemies; and afterwards made to evacuate Ireland under an agreement, in order that they might not obtain the sovereignty of the island, "that they might not make battle for Teambair." Yet their six chiefs^b, under Drostan or Trostan the Druid, remained, and received grants

grants of land in the Campus Bregensisⁱ, Moigh Breagha, or Breag-mhuidh, whereon Tara was situated. Strange, that they were banished lest they should possess the Hill of Tara, and yet were left in possession of the Plain of Tara. It appears through clouds of fable, that Tara was once their's, Temora or Teamhair Breagh a seat of painted Druids, and Erin a kingdom of Picts. Make battle for Tara! Why, the Breagh was their own, and Teamhair was the work of their hands; for they taught to construct the "fair and well-walled house." Pharmacy and surgery, navigation and agriculture, were from them. But for them there was neither idolatry, necromancy, nor divination; and Druidism, it is said, was of the Picti. But for them, no composition of "bright poems;" and bardism was of the Picti.—See p. 144. By another tale the Mur Ollamhan of Tara, and all its arts and sciences, were ascribed to Achy Mac Fiach, styled the Ollave of Ireland, or Ollamh Fodla. And this king, and his six sons and grandsons, were called the "seven Cruithnech kings that ruled over Erin."—See the entry in Tigh. A. D. 172. The original Cruthenians of Temora were the authors of every art whereof Milesian Erin could boast the rudiments. We read that the first royal adultery in Ireland was committed by Tea (daughter of Lughaidh, and wife of Heremon) from whom the name Temora is mythically derived, with Gede Olguthach the Pict.—Amergin on Tara, cit. Petrie on Tara, p. 130. Thus far the Milesians and Cruthenians are kept distinct. But Heremon and Gede, husbands of one wife, were also fathers of the same three children; whence Mr. Petrie infers their identity.—Ibid. p. 153. Now this Gede Olguthach is the second king of Picts, Cruthne's successor, in the Nomina Reg. Pict., Innes, ii. 798; and also^k in the Pictish Chronicle. Therefore Heremon seems to identify himself with the second king of Cruthen-tuath; and, Cruthne's name being taken as merely typical, like Britain, first king of Britain, Francis of France, Dan of Denmark, &c., then with the first. These mythical equivalents resolve themselves into natural equivalents, for whatever represents original Ireland must (if but a corner of the bardic veil be lifted) disclose to us painted Ireland. The exposure of the Cruthenian mythi may be completed, by adding that the Ollamh ⁱ Breagha, son of Breogan, from Brigantium or Betanzos in Spain (Tor Breogan of Keating, and Bregatea of Cuan O'Lochain), gave his name to the Moigh Breagha, where Temora stood, upon Tara Hill. This is of a piece with all the rest. That it was the name of Temora's original possessors is implied in the question which the bard Fintan asks, but omits to answer,

Teamhair Breag whence is it, tell O ye learned [Ollaves]!

When did it separate from the Bruigh?—

See Petrie's Tara, p. 131.

^k For, although there he seems to stand ninth, the intervening seven are the seven brothers from whom the seven provinces were called; who could neither in nature all succeed each other, nor could any of them by Pictish law succeed Cruthne, being his sons.

Ollamh Fodla and his race were styled the Cruithnech kings, because he was son to that same Lonnecada, daughter of Achy Eachbheoil, who also stands godmother to the Dalaradians, five, if not seven, centuries later! And, that Gede Ollguthach, the father of Heremon's children, was the third son of the Ollamh, who lived ages after Heremon! Tuathal, in A. D. 130, is feigned to have been son to Ethne, daughter of Imgheal, king of Picts, to have been educated in Pietland, and to have recovered his crown by aid of Pietish arms.—Ogyg. iii. cap. lxvi.: Keating, p. 213: Cambrensis Eversus, pp. 67, 68. Though some pretended that Temora was a seat of monarchy 1200, if not 1500 years before him, he was the earliest founder of Temora¹ within the purview of history; and I suspect he was once known as the builder thereof. It gives colour to that suspicion that, in the proverbial names^m of Erin, in respect of her principal kings, she was called the Teach (House) of Tuathal. With deference to Tigernach and others, I would prefer to say that historical tradition has its dawn in Tuathal, A. D. 130, than in Cimbaoth, B. C. 305. The long previous anarchy of the Plebeians or Rustics, Aiteachtuatha, after which the restored Tuathal is said to have consolidated the Pentarchal Monarchy, may be no other than that savage disunion out of which the first king of Temora (a Harald Härfagr to Erin) called the Gaelic tribes; a restoration put mythically for a foundation, in order to support the superstructure of fabulous chronology. Whatever he was, he was of Cruthnechan blood and education. In the Book of Lecan, fol. 14, imperfectly cited by Vallancey, Coll. iv. 2. p. 2, after stating how Fintan of portentous longevity had preserved the Irish history, it is added, that Tuan of Ulster “preserved it till Patrick's time, and Columcille, and Comgall, and Finnen, when it was written on their knees, and on their thighs, and on the palms of their hands; and it continues in the hands of sages, of doctors, and historians, and it is on the altars of saints and righteous men from that time down.” This curious statement exhibits the transition of the stigmatical painting from barbarous adornment to other usesⁿ, before

¹ It was a question, as early as the sixth century, when and where Teamhair or Teamhuir obtained its name.

“When was Teamhair [called] Teamhuir?
Is it with Partholan of battles? Or,” &c. &c.

It was agreed among the ollaves, that the name was Milesian or Scot (for other appellations were provided for the ages of the Tuatha De Danann and their predecessors), and so the fable of Heremon and Tea was delivered to the world.

^m The others mostly express natural objects, not works: as fonn, land; iath, land; crioch, country; achadh, field. Clar Chormaic, the table of Cormac, may allude to the introduction of domestic and sedentary arts; while the Cro of Con is of an ambiguous signification.—O'Flaherty, Ogygia, part i. p. 19; Hugh O'Donnell, cit. ibid.

ⁿ To which the Oghams might be conveniently applied. Etruscan figures with inscriptions written upon the thighs may be seen in Montfaucon, iii. part 1, p. 72, part 2, p. 268.

its final abandonment, and in the persons of the early Christians; and, even if incorrect as to date and persons, it cannot have proceeded from an author who doubted the existence of acupuncture among the ancient Irish.

There may be another, though an oblique, way of tracing this British costume in the colony of Erin. A continual recurrence of surnames of colour, either unnatural, morbid, and disgusting, like glas, liath, uaine, laib, buidhe, or strange and grotesque ones, may be accounted for in tribes that had originally been coloured unnaturally, and prided themselves therein; while rarely used by others. But such a solution is almost necessary to account for such squalid epithets, when applied to the great primitive heroes, and even the actual founders, of the nations, creatures of a proud fiction, and names not individual, but typical. What origins ever boasted of an Æneas Lividus, or Romulus Discolor, Cadmus the Dingy, or Inachus the Speckled? But the Gaidheal derive themselves from Gaodhal or Gaidheal, son of Nial and Scota. He was constantly called Gaidheal Glas, because his flesh was spotted of that colour (greenish, or blueish, or livid) by a serpent's sting.—Keating, p. 67. See Malmura of Fahan, in App.; Gilda Coemhain, &c. Here, besides the vile epithet, is the very substance of the fact in an altered form, the natural man turned to woad-colour by puncture^o. Compare the man Gaidheal Glas, with the man Gaidheal Ficht in the Cairnech Legend, p. 187. The captain of the Nemedians, of whom came the Firbolg, was Simon Breac, Maculis Distinctus, or, as some have it, Simon Varius, Britan, the founder of Britain, derives his name (and rightly, I imagine^p) from brît, diversicolor; and he was son to Feargus Leathdearg, Half-red, son of Nemedius, in whom the redness of half his body may have been its natural floridity, as we have observed in the Alban Scots, or Gwyddyl Coch. So, again, taking the red colour for the natural, we may form an idea of king Lugadh Riabhdearg, or Red-streak, who was marked with red circles round his body. A Danannian hero, son to the great Daghdha himself, was Fraoch Uaine. A primitive Scoto-Scythian chief, Heber Glunfinn, or White-knee, was celebrated as grandfather to Faobhar Glas.—Ogygia, ii. p. 67. See Keating, p. 132. Some causes had introduced into Irish use the strange name Dubhdaleth, ^o That a Druid, officiating mystically, was a serpent, appears clearly enough in Cæsar's account of the ocum anguinum.

^p That the bards had in their Anant, or old ritual songs, the name Brithan, Britannia (distinct from the fictitious name Prydyn or Prydain, i. e. Pulcheria), and derived it from brith, painted, I infer from the Gwawdd Lludd y Mawr, v. 20, and

vv. 18, 49, confirmed by various considerations. And, since desuetude elsewhere was the cause of such appellations, that name, Britain or Britan, should have originated subsequently to the cessation of nudity among the Gauls, excepting (probably) the Lemonian Gauls called Pictones.

Dubhdaleth, Both-halves-black. In days anterior to armour^a, I have no notion what a white knee is, except in contrast to a coloured one; nor can I conceive, otherwise, of a man with one half dark, which condition the contrary name Dubhdaleth implies. Jocelyn of Furness tells us of two places in the Cruthenian Ardes of Ulster, to both of which belongs the very strange name of Dundaletghlas, namely, Downpatrick, well known by that name, and another hill-fort in a marsh not far distant.—Vita Patric. c. 38. He interprets the name, two halves of a glas, i. e. a fetter, from the broken bonds of some prisoners, whom an angel set free, and conveyed to these two Duns. But, comparing it with analogous names of colour, and especially with Leathdearg, and Dubhdaleth, I rather interpret Dun Dalethglas, Fort of the Entirely Painted, the Dubhdaleths, the Crutheni of Dalaradia; thus making its sense equivalent in effect to that of the Dun-Craithne in Derry. Besides those analogies, its occurring twice in ancient Cruthenia favours the descriptive sense, rather than any historic allusion. The first man, say the verses ascribed to Fintan himself, who cleared Tara Hill of wood, was Liath, Glaucus or Pallidus, son of Laigin Leathan-glas. The meaning of the surname, Broad-stain^r, probably denotes belts of colour like those of king Riabhdearg, but broad ones. It is easy but unnecessary to multiply examples. The dingy colours expressed in those various terms of glas, dubh, uaine, &c., were the various tints imparted by the woad; the cœruleus color of Cæsar, the Ethiopian tint of Pliny, and the virides Britanni of Ovid. The tinted knee will be best appreciated from the above-cited statement in the Book of Lecan, that the Irish, both in and after St. Patrick's days, had records of facts "written on their knees." The prevailing idea of such names as I have cited is as old as any memorial we have of the Picts. For of those Caledonians who fought against Severus, entirely naked, and tattooed with figures of animals, &c., the only chieftain whose name has come down to us is Argento-Coxus or Silver-hip; evidently so called by the Romans, because he affected to leave his hips unstained.—Dion Cassius, lib. lxxvi. p. 1285. And the comparison of some analogous names among the hero-deities of the British bards, will add to their force.

Some observations are due to the tradition, that the Pictish rule of succession to the

^a The modern armorial surnames, Glunduibh or Genuniger, Gluniarn or Genuferrens, Glun-tradhna or Genucorvi, &c., are quite beside the question.—Vide O'Conor, in Quat. Mag. A. D. 1778.

^r Leathan and glas seem to be both adjectives in the Irish dialect of Gaelic, (though, in Highland or Scottish Gaelic, glas is also a substantive, a green or blue surface), and I know not if any objection thus arises. Where intensity, not extent, of colour is to be measured, there does not; as in dabhglas and liathglas. Changing broad into long, the Welsh Hirlas exactly corresponds.

the crown arose out of a treaty of marriage with ladies of the blood royal of Erin.—Beda, i. cap. 1., and the Irish documents. See also Polydore Virgil. That rule was, that in all cases of doubt they should choose a king in the female line of descent, not in the male. It seems to have been acted upon from the beginning till^s 783, in the latter years of the kingdom, to such an extent that no son stands recorded to have succeeded his father, either immediately, or with intermediates. The sixty-ninth catalogued king, and the twenty-first Christian, was son to his fifth predecessor. But the tradition of such a treaty is not to be received without much hesitation.

The line male can only be legal, where nuptiæ patrem demonstrant, and can only be real where marriages are held sacred. In Cæsar's time a British woman had sometimes ten or a dozen husbands (as she called them), usually men of the same family; and he who had known her as a virgin was accounted father of all her offspring.—De Bello Gall. i. cap. 14. Strabo had collected from report that it was no better in Ireland, or rather that there was no rule at all.—iv. p. 282. St. Jerome, who had resided in Gaul, and had a slight knowledge of what he said, affirms it without limitation: "Scotorum natio uxores proprias non habet . . . Nulla apud eos conjux propria est, sed ut cuique libitum fuerit pecudum more lascivunt."—Adv. Jovin. lib. ii. tom. ii. p. 335. Verona, 1735. He repeats the same thing, with inclusion of those Britons who were called Atticotti. "Scotorum et Atticottorum ritu, ac de Republicâ Platonis, promiscuas uxores, communes liberos, habent."—Epist. 69, ad Oceanum, tom. i. p. 413. These reports may be understood as limiting marriage to a possessory right, loosely observed and frequently dissolved. But nations, of which even rhetoric could draw such pictures, must have been incapable of transmitting paternal inheritances, and must have lived under a pure tanistry, until the improvement of manners began to furnish stronger presumptions of parentage. The positive allegations of sonship, contained in the dynasties of the Antiquaries and Bards, may be language^t of Christian adaptation, even after the names have ceased to be sheer inventions. The mother is the wet nurse; any other economy belongs to art and refinement; and the vehement attachment of the Celtic tribes to their foster-brothers was,

^s Mr. Pinkerton says till 833, but it does not so appear from the lists.

^tOf such adaptation there seems a flagrant instance in the two daughters of Tuathal Teachmar. The king of Leinster married Dairine, and afterwards became desirous of the other sister, Fither. So he went to Temora and said that was, in its origin, simply fraternal affection. The foster-brother was the only brother, and the common breast the only sure tie between them. In the Mabinogion we remark the paucity" of allusions to marriage, considered in any other view than as the fact of occupancy. The Triads of Arthur are very peculiar on this head; for Triad 109 gives "the three wives of Arthur, who were his three chief ladies," and 110 proceeds to give his three chief concubines; so that the authors* of those Triads saw reason to explain, and explain away, what a wife meant. See also the preface to Davydd ap Gwilym, p. 16. But the most singular passage is that of Solinus on the Hebrides. "As you go from the foreland of Calidonia (the Mull of Galloway) towards Thyle, in two days' sail you reach the islands of Hebrides, five in number, of which the inhabitants are unacquainted with grain, and subsist on fish and milk. They all have but one king, for they are divided by narrow waters from each other. The king has nothing of his own, all things belong to all. Fixed laws compel him to equity; and, lest avarice should pervert him from truth, he learns justice from poverty, as having no private possessions. But he is maintained at the public expense. No wife is given to him for his own; but he takes for his use, by turns, whatsoever women he is inclined to, by which means he is debarred from the wish and hope of having sons." —Solinus, cap. 22. This account is most important, as a description, not of barbarism merely, but of its polity. To prevent the evils of a disputed male succession, one purely and necessarily female was provided. The polity therefrom resulting was precisely the Pictish; there no son could stand in his father's place; and in Pictland (nearly to the last) no son ever did. Of the Hebrides, spoken of here as five, as well as by Ptolemy, Marcianus, and Stephanus in Ἀγροῦσαι, viz. Ebuda i., Ebuda ii., Rhicina, Malcos, and Epidium, the last two are undoubtedly Mull and Hay. But Hay, by Irish tradition, was the first seat of the Piets when they left Erin, and the cradle of the kings of Fortren Mor. No man can affirm from internal documents how far the Irish of A. D. 208 were proficient in the art of matrimony, and their external reputation for it was very low. If the ancient laws ascribed to Con and Cormac were satisfactory on these points, it would remain to shew them authentic and uninterpolated. But the contrary may be inferred from the entire silence of Lynch, when he boasts of those legislators, in pp. 157–8, and from his slight and general answer to Giraldus,

Dairine was dead, and that nothing could console him but marriage with Fither, whom Tuathal bestowed upon him. When this fraud was detected, Dairine died of vexation at his misconduct, and Fither of shame at the error into which she had been deceived. Rare sentimentality and tender nerves for A. D. 130-160.

iii. 19.

* As the beautiful edition of them is from a lady's hands, occasional reference to the original text is to be recommended.

† The first series, Tr. 59, merely says, "the three chief ladies of Arthur," where the third and greatest series has "wives;" but the well-known name of Gwenhwyvar or Guenever, ascribed to all three of them, supplies the want of the word wife; besides which the next triad, as in series 3, gives the three concubines.

iii. 19, as touching Pagan times, in p. 155 of the C. Eversus. The ill-fated Gynæceum of Cormac M'Art was, probably, connected with some desire on the part of that able man, to ennoble and purify the female character. Anecdote speaks truer than general declamation; therefore let us hear the wife of Argentocoxus, or Silver-hip, the Pict. The empress Julia Domna reproached her, that they (the Caledonian women), after marriage, cohabited promiscuously with men. But she replied: "We satisfy the wants of nature much better than you Romans. For we openly cohabit with the bravest of men, and you commit secret adultery with the vilest." While we subscribe to her estimate of the merits of the case, we cannot doubt the facts of it. Whosoever would too sanguinely argue from ancient tales of marriages, wives, and queens, from Banba and Scota downwards, should bear in mind that Silver-hip had a sort of wife. We know that he had a lady so called; but we also know what sort of wife she was,—not by her personal fault, but by avowed usage of her nation; and how far, or whether at all, her nuptials demonstrated the father. The same Dion who related this had lately said of the Mæatae and Caledonii collectively, γυναξιν ἐπικοίνοις χρώμενοι. When the increasing civility of dress and manners had fixed upon the adherents to old fashions of nudity the title of Cruthneans, the latter, no doubt, continued also more barbarous in sexual and social rules. Their removal also was into islands where those rites which ascertain father and son were systematically excluded from the court. There is, therefore, no such mystery in the Pictish prosapia fœminea, or uterine tanistry, as should lead us to take up with that bardic romance of the Cruthnich husbands, bound by a solemn treaty to the unpetticoated government of their Milesian wives. Christian or semi-Christian bardism put on dissimulation in dealing with the dark annals of the past; and as it coined fables to dissemble the paintedness of previous generations, so did it others to keep out of sight their γάμον ἄγαμον.

The colour of the Britons, Picts, and Crutheni is not uniformly stated. Cæsar terms it cœrulean; Ovid speaks of the virides Britanni (Amores ii. 16, 39); and Pliny says they imitated the colour of Ethiopians, xxii. cap. i. But they used the herb isatis or glastum, called woad, which by preparation will yield blue, green, and black. The use of more than one tint appears grammatically as well as historically. For glastum in Latin, glas-lys in British, is woad. But glas, in British and in Gælic, means indifferently blue and green. It is surprising that even the simplest of men should have called the firmament on high and the grass under foot by one name of colour. But in truth the phrase is from the dyer's shop, and not from nature, meaning glasticolor, woad-coloured. Of that there is confirmation, in the Gaelic words^x gorm, guirm, guirme, guirmead, meaning alike blue and green, blueness and greenness, to stain blue and green, and guirmean, goirmin, the herb woad. Whereas the words not having such double sense, llasar, blue, neclliu, sky-blue, gwyrdl, ir, uaitlne, green (as well as the determining compounds, like ir-las, green, liath-gorm, azure), do not signify that herb. All names for woad seem to be indifferent as to the two colours, and all words thus indifferent to be names of woad. Therefore tradition and etymology combine to recommend the opinion, that Celtic tribes diversified their skins with several tints and colours, as in Christian times they have distinguished themselves by the colour of their plaids.

In those districts to which the Roman laws against Druidism did not extend, and where the practice had not, as in most parts of Ireland, come to a natural end, Christianity was, no doubt, its destroying power. Besides any connexion it may have had with Pagan creeds, its very nature and object implied the nudity of the greater part of the body, which the Christian decorum has always condemned. But it is probable that the formal conversions by Ninia, Palladius, Columkille, &c., may have found the custom fast dying away under the approaches of the dawning light. Pietland, I have studied to shew, had recently ceased to be governed by a dynasty of Bruides, when Columkille went thither. Yet the memory of that ancient usage,—nay, in some sort, the usage itself,—was superstitiously cherished by those who regretted and secretly retained Druidism. It was so in Roman Britain at that very time; and among the Northern Picts and their neighbours still later. Beli Mawr, to whom every thing British was referred, was son of Manogan, i. e. the Spotted-man, a name formed upon manog, in modern spelling manawg, spotted or party-coloured. They were joint patrons or tutelaries of the island: “Skilfully will I praise thee, victorious Beli! and King Manogan! thou shalt uphold the privileges of Beli’s isle of honey.”—Marwnad Uthyr, p. 73. The same root, manaw, macula, yields the name of another titular hero-god, Manawyd, synonymous with that of Manogan; he was a perpetual guardian of the Cauldron of Britain.—Meib. Llyr. v. 48.

The poem called the Praise of Lludd contains that famous and obscure canticle of the Britons, said to be quoted o’r anant, “out of the hymns,” invoking one Brith or Diversicolor, “Brith i Brithan^y hai!” &c., and describing the sacrifice of a cow that is vraith (feminine of brith) or party-coloured.—pp. 74, 75. Elsewhere it is said: “They

^x It should be mentioned, however, that gorm is also used for red.

(the multitude) do not know the yeh brych, spotted or variegated ox, with the massive head-band."—p. 45. The bard Avaon says,

" I have been a cat with a spotted² head on the triple tree, Bum cath ben-erith ar driphren."—p. 44

And Meigant says of his order, the bards, " let the spotted-headed² host from the cowpen of Cadvan be invited on the day of ample allowance, byddin pen-erith o vuarth Cadvan."—p. 161. In the sorceries of Tintagel tower, when Pendragon put on the similitude of Gorlais, his accomplice, Merlin Ambrose, took the form of Brith-rud; that is to say, useful or effectual by variegation, picturipotens.—Brut. G. ap. Arthur, p. 292. Geoffrey seems to have read brych instead of its equivalent brith, " Merlinus in Bricelem."—viii. 19. Avan Red-Spear, the favourite bard of the redoubted king Cadwallon ap Cadvan, praises him in this peculiar phrase :

Mad ganed, mab brith, cythmor radlawn,
Well-born is he, son of the painted one, gracious sea-divider .
Axle of our privilege, he went [against] the leagued valour of the unjust.
Silent were the crowd of kings before the harmonious oves.
Verdure vegetated when the man was born a blessing
To Cymmry, when Christ created Cadwallawn.—p. 180; vide Evan's Spec. p. 49.

Though mab brith might signify pictus, not filius picti, as mab sant is sanctus, not filius sancti, the words mad ganed imply the latter sense. A certain Brith or Manogan seems to have been honoured as a person typical of Celtic antiquity; which idea would make it "son of Brith." This superstition fell under ecclesiastical censure in the canons of the Synod of Calcuth, in A. D. 785. Those canons were decreed in Northumberland, with the sanction and signature of Aelfward king of Trans-Humbria, his bishops, and abbots; and were adopted and decreed in like manner by the clergy of King Offa, at Calcuth in Mercia. But the following canon evidently originated in the kingdom of Northumberland, which bordered upon that of the Picts, with some intermixture of population. "The Pagans, by inspiration of the devil, introduced most unseemly scars, agreeably to what Prudentius says in his Enchiridion,

' Tinxit et innocuum maculis sordentibus Adam.'²

Verily, if any one for God's sake were to undergo this blemish of staining, he would therefore receive great reward; but whoever does it from the superstition of the Gentiles tiles, it does not avail him to salvation.”—Concil. Chalcutense, ap. Wilkins, i. p. 150. This is a full mild censure, which may, perhaps, imply that the offenders were neither few nor unpopular. Rhydderch Hael, prince of Strathelyde, the opponent of bardism, and more especially of Gwenddoleu the Caledonian and Merddin, invited St. Kentigern or Mungo to Glasgu to restore the Christian religion, which was almost destroyed (penè deleta) in those parts. Kentigern assembled the people, and said: “Whoever begrudge men their salvation, and oppose God’s word, by virtue of God’s word I warn them to depart, that they may offer no impediment to believers. Quo dicto ingens larvatorum multitudo staturâ et visu horribilis a cœtu illo exiens omnibus videntibus aufugit.”—Jocelyn, Vita Kentig. cap. 32; Pink. Vitæ Sanctorum Scotiæ. Though this is so retailed by Jocelyn, as to give the idea of demons, not men, yet the very word larvati, in its ancient sense of haunted, larvis exterriti, is contrary to that idea; and in its mediæval sense of larvâ indutus, wearing a hideous mask, it gives what I conceive the truth of this affair, that the Du-Calidons, and other “brithwyr ddu,” such as Merddin ap Morvryn and his disciples, removed from the congregation those ugly masks which they had substituted for human faces. But the most signal evidence of the systematic character of that superstition, which the Trans-Humbrian prelates pronounced “unavailing to salvation,” is furnished by an ancient bard, who thus describes the three llu, i. e. troops or courses, into which his order, or certain functionaries connected with it, distributed themselves:

[By the] customs of the kingdom	Teyrnas arvereu
The three troops shall be conducted	Dygettawr y trillu
Before the potent visage of Jesus,	Rhag drech drem Iesu;
The troop pure and innocent,	Llu gwirin gwirion

The

^a i. e. Aborigines.

The two last lines relate (in my conjecture) to the third llu, and not to their victims, the glythwyr; though it is a matter of inference^b, not of syntax.

Now the question arises, were these persons whom the bards applaud, and the synod censures, aculeis ferreis^c cum atramento, &c., annotati? I cannot quite think it; but prefer the supposition, that they were, upon occasions, simply painted in a superficial and removable manner; and not stigmatized, as the Du-Calidonian Britons were before St. Ninia, and the Gwyddyl Fichti before St. Columba; without prejudice, however, to their having certain marks partially, and secretly perhaps, imprinted on the body, both for superstition, and as the sign of initiation, and of being a "mab brith."

This entire topic was deprived of much of its chances of elucidation by the destruction of Irish Ulster in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; for that kingdom was both the favourite seat of ancient bardism, and the principal residence of the Crutheni or Picts of Erin. But, even as it is, these pages would have contained more illustration had they been written ten years hence.

Postscript.—My attention has been directed to a work manifesting much acquaintance with the history of the clans, entitled, "The Highlanders of Scotland," &c., by W. F. Skene, F.S.A. Scot., Edinb. 1837. Its coincidence with several of the main arguments and conclusions above offered obliges me to disclaim the suspicion of having purloined any of them from those pages, the existence of which has only now been made known to me, many months after the whole of my notes have been at Dublin. I specially allude to the doctrine, that the kingdom of Picts, to which the Pictish Chronicle relates, was Gaelic, and that its inhabitants were those people whom we call Highlanders. It was entirely unknown to me that such an opinion had ever appeared in print. That the Gael Picts were the whole body of the Albannaich, those excepted who dwelt west of Drumalban, was a conclusion that implied the falsehood of the clan pedigrees, exhibited since the fable of the Pictish extirpation became prevalent. But it

^b In the twelfth century Cynddelw inverted this ancient order of the three troops, and arranged it 2, 3, 1; the inference is supported by his words:

The troop of variegated pugnacious natives;
Secondly, the troop of wrath, blackish, and roaring

it was out of my power to work out that portion of the subject; and I am glad to see it is there so effectually done.

But there are also points which I am unable to concede. In this work is a third attempt to unite the Vecturions and Caledons, making them all Gaels, whom Innes made all Britons, and Pinkerton all Teutons, and I do not see that it is well supported by fact or reasons. Having no space for stating and refuting the arguments upon them, I must go straight to the points. It is not fact, that Ptolemy mentions fourteen tribes of Caledonians, or any tribes of them at all; but the thirteen other names are by him clearly distinguished from the Caledonians. This is writing Ptolemy, not quoting him. I do not believe the list of Bruides consisted originally but of 28. Copies agree in stating they were thirty; and it is as likely, at least, for two names to be lost, as that miscalculation committed. The number 150 was a multiple of 30, not of 28, allotting five years to each king. Nor, if they were 28, could we reduce that number to 14, by retaining the Bruides and rejecting the Ur-Bruides. For nothing can be surer than that the Ur-Bruides meant something, and what they did mean I have already offered a surmise, above, p. xlvi. n. The purpose for which these fourteen Bruides are sought, requires them to be all living and reigning at the same time. Consequently we are told, vol. i. p. 251, that "Bruide is here stated to have thirty sons." Let us hear the statement: "Brude Bout (a quo xxx. Brude regnaverunt per centum quinquaginta annorum spacium) xlviii. annis regnavit." A series of kings, succeeding B. Bout during 150 years, are converted into a family of brothers. Lastly, I am far from persuaded, that the Situs Albanie did by its "septem reges . . . septem regulos sub se habentes," mean to express fourteen persons, not fifty-six persons. The latter scheme would extend the type of the Pictish constitution from the kingdom of the Ardriugh to each Maormor kingdom. We know that type existed in the Cruithne of Daln'araidhe. Cenfaelad, cit. Tigh. in A. D. 563.

The idea of a subsisting bifarious division of Pictland in the eighth century, Cruithne being the northern and Piccardach the southern, seems to me an illusion built on verbal trifles. The form Piccardach exhibits the only Irish name, founded on Pictus, that Tighernach employs. It is a general term, or used, if with any antithesis, in contrast to those of Ireland. Its combination with ard or ardach seems to imply Picts of the mountains; in which case, it is with infelicity restricted to the lowlands. Mr. Skene alleges that "whenever Tighernach has the word Piccardach, the Annals of Ulster use the word Pictores, in Latin, instead of Picti, usually applied by them to the Picts."—i. p. 36. In fact, Tighernach has the word Piccardach in 728, 729, 734, and 750; and Pictones in 669, 750, and 752. Ulster Annals have Pictores thrice, in 668, 675, and 727; Picti (so far as I observe) not usually, but twice, in 697, and 787; and the common genitive, Pictorum, eleven times, in 630, 652, 656, 728, 733, 735, 861, 864, 870, 874, and in 877, where they last mention that nation by name, saying afterwards only Fir Albain. The 728 of Tighernach is Pictores in 727, Ult. His 729 and 734 are the genitive Pictorum in 728, 733, Ult. But the Pictones and Piccardach, both applied by Tighernach to the same people in 750, are reduced by the Ulster Annals to the one word, Pictores. Tighernach thought fit to borrow the name of the Pictones, or Gauls of Pictavia. So Hermannus Contractus, an historian of his age, says at A. D. 446, "contra Scotos et Pictavos." It is evident that his learning was wasted upon the Ultonian annalist, who converted it into Pictores, Painters. This phrase of Pictores has no relation whatever to Piccardach, only to Pictones. If the common genitive is to be fetched from Pictores, that rule must extend to all the eleven instances, including five subsequent to the fall of the Pictish dynasty. Talorcan M'Congusa was, it is said, a Piet of the north; and, as he delivered^d up his own brother into the hands of the Piccardach, there must be "a complete distinction" between the latter and the Picts. But surely a fugitive and outlawed Pict (see Tigh. A. D. 731) can make his peace with the Picts by giving up his brother to them, without our using the word Pict in two senses. Hungust, it is said, receives the title of ri na Piccardach two years before he became king of Pictland; therefore Piccardach was another sovereignty. But ri, a king, does not always mean ardri, the king; and it is a term applied to maormors of Albany, and Irish toparchs, governing provinces under the ardrigh. Thus the maormor Finleg is styled Ri Albain, Tigh. 1020; and in Ult. 1085, Ceannmor reigning, one Domhnall M'Maelcholuim is also Ri Albain. When the general name is improperly added to ri, instead of the name of the toparchy, it only shews the details to be unknown or prætermitted by the writer. I know not whether all Pict princes of the royal blood and succession were personally so styled, perhaps not; but we read concerning the Irish Picts at 629 Tigh., Dicuil ri cenedyl Cruithne cecidit. Any dynastic theory built upon the mere use of the word ri is vain and unfounded. Feebler yet is the suggestion that the northern Picts "were a distinct body under their peculiar appellation of Cruithne." Since the Piccardachs were the southern Picts (we are told), "consequently the name of Cruithne, although occasionally applied to all the Picts, would in its more restricted sense belong to the Dicaladones or North Picts."—pp. 36, 37. Whatever it would do under certain conditions, it never did so in fact. Its more restricted sense, that is, its more frequent sense, to which its Latin (Crutheni) seems really restricted, was the Picts of Erin. The only only prop to this manifest fiction is another equally novel, viz., the interpreting Cruithen-Tuath, Picts of the North, p. 63, whereas the word tuath in that, as in many analogous combinations, is never rendered the north, but the people or nation. Cruithentuath is actually applied by the Masters to the Picts inhabiting Ireland.—Quat. Mag. p. 29; and see above, pp. 126, 158.

I have a word to add on the theory that the Cruithnich came from Albany to Erin, instead of the reverse. If strong arguments combine to confute the declarations of all our earliest authors let them stand confuted, but not otherwise. The system of Mr. Skene requires the Cruithnich or Gaelic Picts to have always held their territory, even from the earliest Roman records; and therefore he is led, systematically, to maintain the above theory. The argument for it runs thus: “In all the Irish annals the name given to the earliest inhabitants of Scotland is Cruithne.”—p. 209. For which read, “given to some inhabitants of Scotland, by me regarded as the earliest;” for more than that is incorrect. “And this appellation is always applied by them to the inhabitants of Scotland, in contradistinction to the Scots or inhabitants of Ireland.” Of the instances (certainly rare) in which Tighernach carries that name out of Ireland, I have only noted three or four, in every one of which it is otherwise. In 505 and 663 there is no contradistinction to anything; and in 560 Cruithnechaibh is contrasted with Albanchaibh, meaning the Scots of Britain. It is the same in 731, where Cruithne are opposed to Dalriadhe, unless that whole passage relates to Ulster. The inference follows: “[In the first^e place,] therefore, it can be proved from Tighernach that the Ultonians or inhabitants of the north of Ireland were Cruithne, and therefore must have come from Scotland.” It can be proved from him and from others, that a very limited portion of the Ultonians were Cruithne. We are only carried thus far, that the name Cruithne was applied to a portion of each island; and thence we are to deduce, that Ireland received it from Albany. By the same process, mutatis nominibus, and with a like disregard of all tradition, we may prove that Ireland was peopled from Argyle and Lorn, and Saxony from England.—(H.)

NOTE

^c What follows, in the second place, is a desperate allegation that Cruithnia was all Ulster, when it is well known to have not even included all Down and Antrim. The plea is, that Fiach Araidh reigned at Emania, and that Cormac fought “against Fiach and the Cruithne.” Ergo the kingdom of Emania is identical with that of the Cruithne. But even these verbal dialectics break down, for the text runs, “against Cruithnia and against Fiach Araidh.” Two againsts, because two powers, viz., the tribe of which he was ri or chieftain, and the kingdom of which he was ardri or pentarch. See Tigh. in 236.

The legendary history of the Picts or Cruithnians, as given in the foregoing additions to the Historia of Nennius, will be found in a somewhat more detailed shape in the following documents, which seem worthy of preservation here, as tending to illustrate and complete the subject.

I. The first is a tract on the History of the Picts, which is preserved in the Book of Lecan, fol. 286, b, col. 2, and is evidently compiled from the same traditions which formed the basis of the narrative given in the text, and in the historical poem on the history of the Cruithnean colony, which has been printed, pp. 126-153:

After Eber had been killed by Eremon in [the battle of] Airgeatros, he (Eremon) reigned over Eri fifteen years; but Eber's year was not in that computation. He built two royal forts, viz., Rath Ainninn in the country of Cualann^f, and Rath Beothaigh^g over the Nore. He then made provincial kings of Eri, viz., he gave the sovereignty of the Gaileon province to Creamthann Sciathbel, of the Domnann race; and he gave the sovereignty of Munster to the four sons of Eber, viz., Er, Orba, Fearon, Feargna. He gave the sovereignty of Connaught province to Un, son of Uici, and to Eatan, son of Uici. He gave the sovereignty of the province of Uladh to Eber, son of Ir a quo the Ultonians of Emania.

of Cruithnigh were these, viz.: Fibra, Fidach, Fotla, Foirtreann, Caitche, Airig, they divided their territories, as the poet relates:

Seven sons that Cruithnech had;
They divided by seven their territory:

her without paying a dowry. They then set out and passed through the Romans into France, where they built a city, viz., Pictairis, a pictis, was its name, i. e.

 of France fell in love with their sister.
 They set out upon the sea, after the death of the fifth brother, viz., Laitenn. In two days after they had gone to sea their sister died. The Cruithneans landed at Inbhear Slaine in Ui Cennsealaigh.

Cremthann Sciathbel, the King of Leinster, told them that they should have welcome from him, on condition that they should destroy the Tuath Fidga. Now Trostan, the Cruithnean Druid, said to them, that he would help them if he were rewarded. And this was the cure he gave them, viz., to spill the milk of seven score hornless white cows near the place where the battle was to be fought, viz., the battle of Ard Leamhnachta in Ui Ceinnsealaigh, against the Tuatha Fidga, viz., a tribe of Britons, who were in the Fotharts¹, with poison on their weapons. Any man wounded by them died, and they carried nothing about them but poisoned iron. Every one of the Leinstermen who was pierced in the battle had nothing more to do than lie in the new milk, and then the poison affected him not. The Tuath Fidga were all killed

power in Eri; until Eremon banished them out of Eri, after which they made peace.

Or, it was^m the sons of Mileadh themselves that sent Cruithneachan mac Inge to assist the Britons of Foirtrenn to war against the Saxons; and they (the Cruithneans) made their children and their swordland, i. e. Cruithen-Tuaithe, subject to them. And they had not wives, because all the women of Alban died of diseases. They, therefore, came back to the sons of Mileadh, who bound them, as they expected the heaven and earth, the sun and the moon, the sea and the land, to be propitious to them, that they would submit to them as kings over them for ever. And they took twelve supernumerary women, who belonged to the Milesian expedition to Eri, whose husbands were drowned in the western sea along with Donn. And hence sovereignty over Cruithentuath belongeth to the men of Eri, according to some authorities. And they were the wives of Breas, and of Buaidne, and of Buas, and of the other leaders, who were all drowned. II. In another part of the Book of Lecan (fol. 141, a, col. 1.), the story of the wives given to the Cruithnians is repeated in a somewhat different form. This document mentions the name of the place where this remarkable treaty between the two nations was said to have been agreed on, and contains also a list of the seven Chruithnean kings of Ireland:

² The seven Laighsi, i. e. the seven septs of Leix. According to the tradition in the country these, after the establishment of surnames, were his reign was white-headed: and it is from him that the name of Ceanannus is given to his places of residence.

Geide Ollgothach after him at Teamhair, and over Fain-Laibe, in the country of Mughdorn [Mourne], he ruled for thirty years. In his reign the voices of all sounded as the music of the harp to each other, so great was the peace in his reign.

Slanoll after Geide. In his reign no person in Eri was diseased. He governed at Teamhair and health was over Eri thirty years.

Bagag Ollfhiacha after Slanoll. He governed Eri at Teamhair thirty years. It was in his reign that wars were first begun in Eri.

Bearngal after Bagag. He governed Eri at Teamhair thirty years. It was in his reign that all the corn of Eri, except one sack, was destroyed, on account of the wars in Eri, and for their frequency.

These, then, are the seven kings that ruled over Eri of the Cruithnians of Alba.

Of the Cruithnians of Eri, i. e. of Dal Araidhe¹, are the seven Laighsi² [Leix] of Leinster, and the seven Soghains and all the Cailli³ that are in Eri.

the Book of Leinster, a MS. of the twelfth century, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin. (H. 2. 18. fol. 8. a.)

It was at that time [the time of Heremon] the Cruithnians came to Eri, and landed at Inbher Slaine in Uí Cennselaigh. Crimthan allowed them to settle in his territory, on account of the remedy which the Cruithnian druid discovered for him, for making battle with the Tuath Fídgá, in Fothartaibh [Forth], viz., a people of the Britons. Because every one whom they wounded was sure to die; and they used no other than poisoned weapons. And the remedy was, to spill the milk of six score white hornless cows into the furrows of the place on which the battle was to be fought. Whence it was called the battle of Ard-leamhnachta. And the whole of the Tuath Fídgá were cut off through that artifice.

And Catluan, son of Cing, of Cruith-entuaidh, acquired great sway over Eri. And Heremon banished him.

After that Cruithnechan, the son of Cing, came to beg for wives from Heremon. And Heremon gave him the wives of the men that were drowned at the Dumachs, viz., Breas, and Broes, and Buagne. And they were obliged to give the sun and the moon as guarantees that not less should territorial succession be derived from men than from women, forever.

that Irial Glunmhar, the son of Conall Cearnach, was the first of his race who was called Cruithne, and this because he was a níu Cruithne, i. e. filius sororis Cruthnei,—Loinceadha, the daughter of Eochaidh Echbheoil, of Alba, being his mother.

The principal sept in Ireland called Conailli were the Conailli-Muirtheimhne, who inhabited the level part of the county of Louth, extending from the Cuailgne, or Cooley mountains, to the River Boyne.

¹ The reading here given strongly confirms the conjectural emendation of the passage suggested note ¹, p. 162. The word fin. is an evident mistake of the transcriber for fil. or filius, arising from his not understanding the contraction fi, which he has himself sometimes retained.

It appears also that the contraction ūtūz, p. 162, which I there supposed to be intended for “ communiter,” is really a corruption of the termination erunt, of the word “ regnaverunt.”

As the foregoing list of kings is so nearly the same as that printed above, pp. 158–167, it has not been thought necessary to add a translation. It ends fol. 87, a, b, and occupies two columns of the manuscript, which evidently contained a complete copy copy of the Irish version of Nennius, although only a single page now remains. It is followed, as in the text (see p. 168, suprà), by an abridged translation, in Irish, of the beginning of Bede's Church History.

V. To the foregoing documents, which may be regarded as the principal sources of the history, may be added the narrative of Keating, which was compiled from them; but this is so accessible to students of Irish history, that it will not be necessary to reprint it here.—(T.)

The vigorous Mac Brethach.—The number of fifty kings demonstrates that Macbethach, i. e., Macbeth, is the name here signified; the letter r having crept in by an error of transcription. Macbeth Mac Finleg succeeded Donnchadh Mac Crinan in the united sovereignty of Fortren Mor and Dalriada. His contemporary and subject, the author of the Duan, calls him Maebeatha Mac Finlaoich, vv. 102, 103. In the Nomina Regum Pictorum, Innes ii. p. 803, Chron. Regum Scotiae, ib. p. 791, and Register of Loch Leven, his father is respectively called Finleg, Findleg, and Finlach. The catalogue in Cambrensis Eversus writes Finlaigh. That which is given above, p. 166, and p. lxxvii., absurdly says, Macbeathad, son of Fin, grandson of Laig! This is the ancient Irish name of Finloga, borne by the fathers of Finnian of Clonard and Brendan of Clonfert; and it is the modern Scotch name Finlay. John of Fordun (with an ignorance, or contempt of truth, of which the former would be surprising) makes it the woman's name, Finele; of which hereafter. Hector Boece, his right worthy follower (246 b. 249 b.), has changed her into a man, Syncele, yet retains the locality of that famous woman in Angus; and he furnished the history to Holinshed and Shakspeare,

“ By Sinel's death, I know, I am Thane of Glamis.”

Among those hereditary lords of provinces, who were called in North Britain maormors or mormaers, and whom the Irish writers often called righ or ri, was a certain Rudri or Ruaidhre. He had two sons, Malbrigid and Finleg. The latter, whom Ulster Annals describe simply as being a “ ri Alban,” was, according to Tighernach, “ the mormaer of the sons of Croeb;” but I cannot find it stated what territory that clan possessed; and he was, in 1020, “ slain by the sons of his brother Malbrigid.” In 1029, one of his nephews and destroyers, Maelcolain Mac Maelbrigid Mac Ruadri, called by Tighernach a “ ri Alban,” died. And, in 1032, another nephew, “ Gilla-Comgan mac Maelbrigid, Mormaer Murebe (of Moray or Murray), was burnt, and fifty others with him.” In 1040, Macbeth Mac Finleg Mac Ruadri became ardrigh of Albany, and was slain in the last days of 1056. In 1057, Lulach, son of Gilcomgan, was reigning, and died ardrigh of Albany. And, in 1085, Maelsnectai, son of Lulach, and ri Muireb, died feliciter or in peace. Such, I believe, is the amount of the extant notices of the house of Ruadhri.

Finnleikr Jarl the Scot is mentioned at the close of the tenth age, as contending against Sigurd Hlodverson, Earl of Orkney (who afterwards fell in the battle of Clontarf), with superior forces but inferior fortune, in a battle fought at the Skidamyri^d in Caithness. Olaf's Tryggvasonar Saga, i. p. 199. 1825. The same page mentions a previous victory gained in Caithness by Liot, Sigurd's uncle, over Margbiodr, another Scozkan jarl, or Scottish maormor. Macbeth Mac Finleg was too young for the tale to be true of him; yet I think it exhibits a Norse^e corruption of some of the spellings of his name. The celebrity of Finleg's name among the Northmen may be argued from the fabulous romance entitled Samson Fagra's Saga, where Finlaugr figures as a Jarl of Brettaland, Britain. See that Saga, c. v. p. 6, c. vii. p. 10, in Biorner's Nordiska Kampa Dater. We know that Moray was hereditary in the house of Malbrigid; and I suspect the mic Croeb were seated in Crombath or Cromarty, or more generally in Ross. For in Macbeth's dream of the weird sisters, the first of the three salutations, descriptive of his natural and first estate, was, "Lo! yonder the Thane of Crwmbawchty!"—W'g'ytown's Cron. vi. cap. xviii. Crombath, as now limited, is the eastern angle and estuary of the extensive Land of Ross; in which territory it is, therefore, probable, that Finleg Mac Ruadri had his estates or dominions.

I think that his brother, Malbrigid (whose death is unchronicled, but seems to have occurred anterior to 1020), was probably that jarl of the Scots, Melbrigda Tönn, or Malbrigid of the Long Tooth, treacherously slain at a parley by Sigurd, the Norwegian Earl of Orkney, who had overrun Caithness, Sutherland, and Ross, and even built a fort in the Australis Moravia.—Olaf Trygg, cap. xciv. p. 194; Torf. Orc. i. cap. iv. But this story is told of Sigurd, son of Eystein; whereas the date of Malbrigid, as well as the magnitude of this Sigurd's encroachments upon Scotland, would rather require it to be understood of Sigurd Hlodverson. We collect elsewhere who that Maormor was whom Sigurd Eysteinson had put to death; it was Malduin (Meldunus comes e Scotiâ) father of Erp, and husband to Mirgiol, daughter of Gliomal, an Irish rex.—Torf. Orc. i. cap. v. p. 16.

Macbeth

^d Marsh of Skida.

^e Torfæus had somewhere found it written Magbragda, which comes nearer to Mac, in the first syllable, while the residue is borrowed from Melbrigda. And he represents the defeat of this maormor as occurring at the same Skidamyri. —Orcades, c. ix. p. 25.

Macbeth Mac Finleg was certainly married to the lady Gruoch, daughter of Bodhe or Boidhe.—Chartulary of Dunfermlin, cit. Pink, ii. p. 197; Reg. of St. And. cit. Chalmers Cal. i. 397, n.; “ Dame Grwok,” Wynt. vi. p. 18, 35. That Bodhe is supposed to have been son to Kenneth III.^f or IV. whom Malcolm II. slew and succeeded in 1003. Ulster Annals, at 1033, say, Mac mic Boethe mic Cmaeōa oo mapbaō la Maelcoluim Mac Cmaeōa. The son of the son of Boethe, son of Kenneth, was slain by Malcolm, son of Kenneth.—Dublin MS. This unnamed man, grandson of Boethe, nephew of Gruoch, and great grandson of Kenneth IV., was slain in 1033; but nothing is known of his grandfather’s fate. The violent death of Gilcomgan and his friends, in 1032 (and perhaps the death of his brother Malcolm, in 1029), was, probably, the penalty of Finleg’s blood, which the young Macbeth would naturally desire, and, I think, did not want the power, to revenge. That Gruoch was his widow may be conjectured on the following ground: Gilcomgan was maormor or ri of Moray; and that province descended peaceably, through his son Lulach, to his posterity. Yet her husband Macbeth, Maormor of Cromarty, was reputed to have somehow acquired the government of Moray, inasmuch as the second of the “ werd systrys,” saluted him as the future^g thane of Morave.—Wyntown, tom. i. p. 216. The intimate connexion between Lulach and Macbeth will appear presently.

The claims of Finleg’s son to the united crowns of Dunstaffnage and Scone remain unknown and unexplained. Donnchadh, daughter’s son and successor to Malcolm II. and son to Crinan, Abbot of Dunkeld and Abthane^b of Dull, was, as the Annalists write, a suis occisus; or, as the Nomina Regum say, was slain by Macbeth at Bethgowanan (Lochgosnane ap. Fordun) near Elgin; or, according to the Elgiac Chronicle,

Vulnere lethali rex apud Elgin obit.”

However Mariamus, who was about twelve years old when it happened, acquires Macbeth

^f Kenneth Grim Mac Duff, cousin-german to Malcolm II.

^g In that legend, the existing and apparent fact is elegantly distinguished from the second sight, or vision of things future: I. Lo! yonder the thane of Crwmbawehty! II. Of Morave yonder I see the thane. III. I see the king. By what lying folly Angus or Glamis was, in later times, substituted for Cromarty, will appear in season. Calder or Cawdor, now situate in Nairn and Inverness, was in ancient Moray; and that modern salutation is equivalent to the ancient, describing the Moravian Mormaer by one of his principal fastnesses, as the Angusian is described by that of Glamis. See Rhind’s Sketches of Moray, p. 1. The modern division into counties is of no use for those times.

beth of direct agency in that bloodshed, saying: “1040, Donchad king of Scotia is slain a duce suo. Mag-Finloech succeeded to his kingdom.” For here the dux and the successor seem distinct persons. Duncan had succeeded Malcolm in 1033, and therefore, when the blood of the Lady Gruoch’s nephew was still fresh; but nothing, unless it be his perishing by her husband’s means, points to him as guilty of it. But if we may credit an ancient tradition (not to surmise any lost compositions in prose or verse) which flows through channels rather friendly than neutral, and comes to us conjoined with virulent abuse of his destroyer, the son of Crinan had provoked his fate by vicious and impolitic behaviour. For Wyntown tells us, that he made the miller’s daughterⁱ of Forteviot “his lemman luwyd,” and begat on her a bastard son who afterwards reigned as Malcolm Ceanmor. After Duncan’s death (so the story runs) she married a boatman or batward, whose piece of land was transmitted to their posterity, and called the Batwardis land. Wyntown proceeds to boast that the Empress Maud, many kings of England and Scotland, and Pope Clement II., were descended from the miller of Forteviot. He certainly knew nothing of what his contemporary, John of Fordun, had written, or was just about to write, that Duncan’s^k wife, “consanguinea Sywardi comitis,” bore him Malcolm and Donald. iv. c. 44. The early writers assign no sort of domestic or personal motives for Earl Siward’s march into Scotland, which was simply made jussu Eadwardi regis. Simeon Dunelm. in 1054. Duncan proceeded to load this girl with honour and dignity,

“ This woman he would have put til hycht, Til great state, and til mekyl mycht ;”

but that bad policy was put down by the revolt of the son of Finleg,

“ But Macbeth-Fynlak, his syster sowne,
That purpose letted til be downe,” and the crown was transferred to his head, on the death of Duncan at Elgin.—cap. xiv. p. 206. These events happened in 1039 or 1040. Macbeth then reigned for seven-teen years in prosperity and affluence,

In cujus regno fertile tempus erat.”—Chron. Eleg.

ⁱ Perhaps the fame of it reached the northern kingdoms. For the Samson Saga mentions, that Finlog, the Jarl of Brettaland, had among his subjects a miller Galin, and a giantess living under the mill stream; by whom, and by their son, all the distresses of that wild romance are brought about. The miller and giantess are destroyed, but the wicked son survives. Farther than as above, the matters are totally irrelevant.

^k He does not say “wife,” but it is sufficiently implied. Boece and Buchanan improve consanguinea into filia.

I think the death of Malcolm II., leaving only grandchildren through his daughters, produced a disputed succession ab initio. Simeon of Durham was perhaps born about the time of Macbeth's death, since he died about seventy-two years later. He lived near the Scottish border at the time Duncan's sons were reigning, and ignorance on his part is hard to suppose. Yet he takes no notice of any King Duncan, and says, "anno 1034, Malcolm rex Scotorum obiit, cui Machetad successit."—Sim. in anno in Twisden. This is the more remarkable, because Marian, of whose work Simeon made use, had said, "1033-34, Masleolum, king of Scotia, died; Donchad, son of his daughter, succeeded him for five years." Simeon must have held with some persons who counted Duncan as an intrusive pretender; and implies that Finleg's son asserted his rights during the whole time. This becomes clearer at the accession of Malcolm III., whom Simeon describes as "son of the king of Cumberland," thus owning that Duncan had been appointed tanist under his maternal grandfather, and entitling him accordingly, but denying that he had ever been king of Scots. Sim. Dunelm. et Florent. Wigorn. in 1054. It is recorded by the Northmen that, at this same epoch of the second Malcolm's death, one Karl Hundason "took the kingdom¹ of Scotland," that is to say, assumed the style of ardrigh; and they appeal to^m the contemporary and undeniable authority of the Orkney bard, Arnor Jarlaskald, of whose poems the authenticity will hardly be questioned. He appeared as king of Scots in Caithness, supported by the forces of an Irishman acting in Caithness, named Moddan of Duncansby, and calledⁿ brother (in the sense, I suppose, of brother-in-law) to the king of the Scots, whom Karl appointed to be his general, and, on Thorfinn's refusal of tribute, to be Jarl of Katanes. He appears to be described as cousin-german of Karl. But in various actions Moddan was defeated, and slain, by Thorfinn Sigurdson (daughter's son to Malcolm II.), and by his tutor, Thorkell-Fostri; and Karl, equally unsuccessful in his own subsequent efforts, disappeared from those parts, and his fate was never ascertained.—Orkneyinga Saga, p. 31. Karl's forces, besides those from Ireland, were raised both in East and West Scotland, and especially in Cantire^o. He was son to Hundi, i. e. Canis, otherwise Hvelpr, i. e. Catulus. Sigurd, ⁿ Skota konung's brodur.—Nial's Saga, cap. 86. Moddan is the same Irish name, as that of Modan of Kilmodan Abbey in Longford (doubtful whether saint or reprobate,—Lanigan ii. 325-6), and that of a Scotch saint,

"Some to St. Modan pay their vows,
Some to St. Mary of the Lowes."

Lay of Last Minstrel, vi. st. 27.

^o Called in the Norse tongue Satiria. See Orkn. Saga, p. 39, p. 115.

Sigurd, before marrying that king's daughter, had defeated the two Scottish jarls, Hundi and Melsnaddi or Melsnata^p (Maelsnectai), not far from Duncansby, and slain the latter. See Nial's Saga, cc. 86, 87. This Hundi should be Karl's father. Sigurd also himself had a son Hvelpr or Hundi, whom Olaf son of Tryggvi took to Norway as a hostage, and christened Hlodver. These events happened from twelve to thirteen years after Finleg's death; and when Karl^q was quite in his youth, for Arnor Jarlaskald, Earl Thorfinn's bard, says of him and the war he carried on,

“ The youthful king was the cause thereof.”

Therefore Karl coincides with Macbeth in these points: in his probable age, in that he was a claimant of the crown on Malcolm's death, that he did not then succeed in his claims, and that he is not averred to have perished in the attempt. But he differs in the names, Karl Hundason being very different from Macbeth Mac Finleg. The difference however is evanescent; for the Norse word Karl is no more of a Scoto-Pictish name, than Philadelphus or Soter were Coptic names. And the Norse word Hundi was not any name at all, but a nick-name, being given (both to this Celt, and to Hlodver Sigurdson) in the alternative, Hvelpr edr Hundi, Hundi etha Hvelpr, anglicè, “either hound or puppy.” We chiefly, if not solely, meet with it for a name^s in Orkney and Caithness; and perhaps it was adopted from the Gaelic appellation by which alone a king of Scots of the tenth century (a vile person, but whether so called on that account I do not say) is known to us, Culen or Catulus. Vide Olaf Trygg. cap. xcvi. tom. i. p. 202, ed. 1825; et ap. Snorro, cap. xi. p. 145; Torfæi Orc. i, cap. x. cap. xiii. Considering the synchronism of Simeon Dunelmensis; that Malcolm II. could scarcely have any claimant of his inheritance named Karl, otherwise than through his daughter, Sigurd's wife; that no idea of a Norse claim to the succession, through Sigurd, is anywhere hinted; and that the right and might of such a claim, had it been raised, would have been with Malcolm's grandson, the valiant Thorfinn Sigurdson, Earl of Orkney and Katanes; I am induced to the belief, that Macbeth in his youth was known in the northern jarldoms by the Teutonic appellation of Karl, man, and that his father, Finnleikr Jarl, who fled before Sigurd Hlodverson at the Skidamyri, ^p Mel is the regular equivalent of the Gaelic Maol or Mal.

^q Therefore I have rendered the ambiguous word systerson, applied to Moddan (Orkn. p. 30), by cousin-german, and not nephew.

^r Olli, in causâ fuit, from the verb vellð, efficere, in causâ esse.

^s I mean standing by itself; for, added on to other names, we find Sigurd Hund and Thorer Hund in Norway.

Skidamyri, was likewise the Hundi Jarl, dog, whom the same prince defeated, also in Caithness; the son's title standing in favourable antithesis to the father's. Finleg did not fall by northern hands, neither did this Hundi or Hvelpr; and Maelsnectai, the name of this Hundi's colleague in the war, was a name used in the house of Ruadri.

The most violent domestic occurrence of Macbeth's reign happened in 1045, namely, the bloody battle in which Crinan, father of the deceased Duncan, fell, prælium inter Albanenses invicem, in quo occisus est Crinan Abbas Dunceldensis et multi alii cum eo, i. e. novies viginta heroes.—Tigh. It is written, that Macbet filius Finlach gave lands to the Culdees, i. e. the Chapter, of Lochlevin.—Regr. of Lochl. But very few of his acts have been permitted to survive. In 1054, Siward, Earl of Northumberland, was sent into Scotland by the Confessor, and gained a battle over Macbeth, whom he put to flight, fugavit.—Sim. Dun. in anno. Chron. Sax. ibid.; Flor. Wig. ibid. Two Norman nobles who had found refuge at his court in 1052, by name Osbern and Hugo, fought on Macbeth's side and were slain.—Roger Hoveden in anno. Ulster Annals describe it as a battle between the men of Albany and the Saxons, in which 3000 of the former and 1500 of the latter fell, and on the Saxon side a certain Albanian (to judge from his name) called Dolfinn, son of Finntur.—Ann. Ul. in 1054. By like order of King Edward, the Earl constituted Malcolm Ceanmor king.—Sim. et Flor. ibid. It cannot be said what portion of the country he succeeded in conquering. But whatever Siward may have proclaimed after gaining the battle, the accession of Malcolm is universally dated more than two years later. Siward died the next year, and Malcolm resumed the war in 1056. On the 5th of December 1056 (Fordun) Macbeth was slain in a battle fought against Malcolm, at Lumphannan in Aberdeenshire; and he was buried in the royal cemetery of Iona. His fame has been both obscured and magnified through a mist of lies, partly fabricated in honour of the house of Stuart, but now immortalized and enshrined for ever.

After the battle of Lumphannan, Lulach Mac Gilcomgain, son to the burnt Maormor of Moray, first cousin once removed from Macbeth, and perhaps his stepson and ward, was proclaimed King at Scone by the opponents of Malcolm. In the Nomina Regum he is Lulach Fatuus; in Wyntown, vi. 19, Lulaweh Fule; in the Chron. Regum Scotiæ, temp. Willelm. filii David, simply Lulach; and in the Chron. Rhythmicum main just the synchronism of Simeon, and whatever is conformable in the circumstances of Finleg.

micum (before 1291) it is, absurdly, Lahoulan; MSS. of the Duan have Lulagh and Lugaith^u. The Mac Gilcomgain of Ulster Annals is nepos filii Boidhe in Chron. Reg. Scottorum. Perhaps it should be filiae Boidhe, as Gruoch was termed; and the nepos is ambiguous in the Latin of those days. Whatever it means, the traditional filiation in Mac is of a greater weight than such a passage can have. But in that passage (howsoever we should correct either the copy or the author) we have Lulach's only title in blood, that I am aware of, to become tanist of the supreme crown, namely his descent, probably maternal, and through the lady Gruoch^v, from Boidhe, son of Kenneth Macduff. His reign was of four months (Nomina Regum), or of four and a half (Chron. Reg. Scot., and the prose dates in Chron. Elegiacum); but in the elegy itself,

Nevertheless, the old Mr. O'Connor's copy of the Duan Albanach says expressly.

“ Seacht mbliadhna i bhflaitheas Lulaigh,”

“ Seven years was the reign of Lulagh.”—v. 104.

Another copy of that poem has seven months, seacht mis. He was overpowered and slain by Malcolm at a place called Essei in Strathbogie (Nom. Reg. Pict.) in 1057. Though accounted daft or fatuus, headlong temerity was probably his defect, rather than supine imbecility. His want of prudence was fatal to his cause, for Tighernach states that he was slain per dolum, and the Chron. Eleg. runs thus, “ Armis ejusdem Malcolomi cecidit,

Fata viri fuerant in Strathbolgin apud Esseg, Heu! sic incautè rex miser occubuit.”

He was buried along with Macbeth in Iona,

“ Hos in pace viros tenet insula Iona, sepultos
In tumulto regum, Judicis usque diem.”

And the consideration of his case is essential to the reign of Macbeth, the topic of this note.

His reigning seven years can only be true, in case he was associated to the crown during the seven last years of Macbeth's reign, and died in or after the seventh year of his own kingship, but only in the fourth or fifth month of his own separate reign.

I would fling it aside as a clerical error, did I not meet with circumstances, indicating both that he so reigned, and for that number of years. Ulster Annals say, at 1058, "Lulach Mac Gilcomgain, arch-king of Albany, was slain in battle by Maelcolaim Mac Doncha;" and Tighernach had said at the same year, "Lulach, king of Albany, was slain by Colum Mac Donchada, by stratagem." Then come other intervening events; after which, in the same year, "Maebeth Mac Finlaich, arch-king of Albany, was slain in battle by Maelcholaim Mac Doncha;" and in Tighernach, "Macbetad Mac Finlai was slain by Maelcolaim Mac Donchada." These statements declare that, though one year killed both kings, Lulach died first. Now Tighernach O'Brain died at Clonmacnois in A. D. 1088 (Ann. Inisfal.), thirty-one years after Maebeth and Lulach. And he was not born later than about 1020, though perhaps earlier, for Marianus was born in 1028, and spoke^m of him as "Tighernaeh senior meus." And, therefore, the latter is likely to have been Lulach's senior himself. But Tighernach could scarce have been ignorant^x that Maebeth had ruled the whole of Albany during seventeen years of his own lifetime. Therefore when he represented Lulach (no matter if incorrectly) as dying king of Albany before Maebeth, who had been such for so many years, he did, in effect, declare that they had been kings together. He did, in effect, deny that Lulach was, in the common sense of it, Maebeth's successor; for had he been such, the very phrase, Lulach, king of Albany, previously unheard of, must have first reached the ears of Tighernach, together with the news of Maebeth's death. Conjoint reigns occur among the Picts, num. 43, 48, 63, 73; and of the Scoto-Picts, Eochaidh and Grig reigned together for eleven years. Such authors as Boece and Buchanan are not to be quoted as evidence per se; but their unexplained statement, that Maebeth reigned for ten years like the best of kings, and for seven years like the worst of tyrants, strangely coincides with the premises.—Boetius, xii. fol. 246, b; Buchanan, even imagined she was Duncan's widow, and married his slayer, who

" Dame Grwok his emys wyf Tuk, and led with her his lyf."

The truth may be, that she was privy to her husband's death and did marry with his destroyer, in 1032, when Gilcomgan was burned.

* See O'Connor not. in Ann. Ult., p. 327. If this were understood of some other Tighernach, the ease would yet stand well. For sixty-eight years was no long life for an ancient man of religion, and celebrated for learning. But if the historian died at fifty-five, he was twenty-four at the death of Maebeth.

^x It would be captious to reply, that this analyst has mistaken the year, putting 1058, for December, 1056, and April or May, 1057. For it is one thing to misdate slightly the occurrences of a foreign kingdom, and another to ignore a long and famous contemporary reign. The priest may now live at Clonmacnois, who will say, that Louis Philippe acceded in 1831, for 1830; but not he that will say, that he acceded four months ago.

Buchanan, vii. 85. It divides his reign at the precise point of seven years, and changes its temper, with no alleged reason, but in harmony with that of a Fatuus. We read in a text of the contemporary Duan, that Lulach did reign seven years; we collect from his other contemporary, Tighernach, that he must have reigned before the death of Macbeth; and have found in historians the assertion, that Macbeth's last seven years strangely differed from the prior ten. It remains to corroborate the latter by the testimony of worthier authors. Marianus Scotus (born in 1028, as he states, p. 450, ed. Pistorii, 1613, and twenty-nine years old when Macbeth died) says, at the year 1050, Rex Scotiae Machetad Romae argentum seminando pauperibus distribuit. Simeon of Durham, who died about half a century later than Marian, at the same year says the same, only putting the word spargendo for the words seminando pauperibus. Lulach died in 1057, and 1050 is the year at which his Duan reign commenced, and at which the historians date the change in Macbeth's administration. Marianus neither avers that he took the money to Rome, nor that he sent it; but he couples the ambiguous word distribuit with the gerund seminando, which graphically exhibits him casting his largesses among the crowd. Wyntown, a simple and faithful writer, so understood the matter:

“ Quhen Leo the Tend [ninth] was Pape of Rome,
As pylgryne to the curt he come,
And in his almshouse he saw [seminavit] sylver
Til all pure folk that had myster [need].”—vi. p. 226.

But he was again in Scotland before the end of the year 1052.—Hoveden in anno. Certainly the fact of his pilgrimage to Rome (of which Canute the Great had set the example some twenty years before) can only be denied by putting a harsh construction on the words of Marianus, or by rejecting his testimony, than which we cannot look for better, as he had not emigrated to Germany in 1050. But that fact, if admitted, remarkably confirms the premises, for it shews him actually quitting for a time, and therefore intrusting to another, the helm of government in the year in question. And, if he intrusted it to another, then to what other than him, who is asserted to have come to the crown at that very date, and who is assumed to have been king of Albany before Macbeth's death? Likewise the reading of the Duan, which confines him to months, gives seven months, a number quite different from all the other accounts of his sole reign. It may therefore well be credited, that his entire reign was seven years, and his sole reign of three or four months. For the authority of the Scottish documents in general leads us to suppose, in opposition to the Irish annalists, that Lulach did survive Macbeth.

I am not only at a loss for Macbeth's claim (hereditary or^s tanastic) to the crown, but am unable to satisfy myself as to his appellation. I do not understand how the son of Finleg is called son of Beth; or how a filiation, even if true, could supply the place of a name in the ancient mode of nomenclature. Yet we read of his contemporary, Macbeathaidh M'Ainmirech: and in the ninth century St. Macbethu and two other Irish pilgrims visited England.—Sax. Chron. in 891. Probably it expresses the mother's name, and so resembles the use of Mac Ere, with this difference, that the great fame of Erea, the mother of kings, partly superseded Muirchertach's own name, but Macbeth had no other. The name Beathaig is said, in Armstrong's Dictionary, to be Gaelic for Sophia, and the Gaelic Society's Dictionary says that Beathag means Rebecca. As wisdom is blessed, and Rebecca was blessed, this curious identity of dissimilar names resolves itself into the Latin Beata. We know not who Macbeth's mother was; for Wyntown's tale, that she was Duncan's sister, and that of Boece, that she was Doada, Duncan's maternal aunt, have no firm basis in history. But the name Beathaig, or Beata in Latin, is the same with that of Bethoc (as the older Latin documents² term her), daughter to Malcolm II., wife to Crinan of Dunkeld, and mother of Duncan; the Beatrix of Fordun, Boece, and Buchanan. That is apparent from the Elegiacal Chronicles of Melrose, for I cannot understand them otherwise than by taking Bethoc to mean Beata:

“ Abbatis Crini, jam dieti filia régis, Uxor erat Bethoc, nomine digna sibi.”

The name is formed on the types, Beathaidh, Bethad, or Betad, and, by contemporary clerical error, Hetad; and Beathaigh, Bethach, or Betac; for the Bethu of the Saxon, though curious, cannot be relied on. This oscitancy may be referred to its irregular and exotic origin. It is singular that the very same alternation shews itself in Daoda and Doaca, Macbeth's mother in Boece and in Buchanan; being, as it were, decapitations of Bethod and Bethoc. Therefore I take Macbethach, Macbeathaidh, Micbeatha, Macbeth, Macbethu, &c., to mean Filius Beatæ; and suspect it to signify, in this particular instance, that Bethoc, daughter of Malcolm, gave birth to Finleg's son, either before or during her union with Crinan, or after some dissolution thereof. The legend that he was son to Duncan's sister, would make him a grandson of Bethoc, while Boece makes him her nephew.—Wynt. vi. 16, v. 47; Boetius, 246, b. But the same same fable of his birth supposes the incontinence^a of his mother; for she sauntered into a wood, where she met

¹ Since the time of Kenneth III. or IV., son of Malcolm, the two principles of succession had been conflicting; and the former gaining upon the latter, to the prejudice of both Indulf's line and the nearer line of Duff.

² And as other women were called. See Char-tul. of Jedburg, ap. Pink. ii. 192.

Of bewtè plesand, and of hycht
Proportiownd well in all mesoure, &c. :
Thar in thar gamyu and thar play
That persown by that woman lay,
And on her that tyme to sowne gat
This Makbeth.”—vi. 18, vv. 59–74.

That lover, it is added, was the Devil himself; which accounts for Wyntown always calling him Makbeth-Fynlak, not son of Fynlak; but does not equally agree with his Latin quotation,

In Latyne wryttene to rehers
A Fynlake natus percussit eum Macabeda.”

But if we substitute Finleg for Satan, and Duncan's mother for his sister, Macbeatach in one word becomes Mac Beatach in two, and the whole affair receives elucidation. The blood of Malcolm II. is as good in Macbeth as in his half brother Duncan, legitimacy excepted; and if it was proposed to make the bastard of the miller's daughter tanist of all Albany, that argument was abandoned.

In A. D. 994, Kenneth III. or IV. father of Malcolm II., grandfather of Bethoc and great-grandfather of Duncan, was a suis occisus, and per dolum.—Tigh. and Ann. Ult. It is said, the lady Finele or Fenella, daughter of Cruchne or Cruthneth, thane of Angus or Forfar, and mother to Cruthlint, chieftain of Mearns, instigated her son to murder her father, for which he was put to death by Kenneth. To revenge his death and to advance the rival interests of the families of Culen and Duff, she allured Kenneth into her house (probably Glamis castle) and there assassinated him. It may

^a Who, therefore, could not be “nomine digna.” But it is very plain, that the Scoto-Saxon successors of Ceanmhor, and their writers, delivered a different sort of history, both in statement and in suppression, from the previous traditions. Till Fordun had established the manufacture of Scotch history, both modes of thinking continued alive, and between them Wyntown's honest mind was bewildered, and so are our's. In the Scoto-Saxon era, the history of the house of Ruadri in the lines of Finleg and Gilcomgan was obscured, partly by silence and partly by falsehood, and to us remains the amusement of conjecture; but we may as well judge the case of Warbeck by Tudor testimony, as that of Macbeth and Ceanmhor by the language of the Duncanites of that era.

may be supposed, from their names, that this family (otherwise unknown) were Piets^b. In 1033-4 a similar fate befell his son Malcolm II., who was treacherously slain at Glamis by the same Angustian family. See Fordun, iv. 32, 41, 44; Boetius, 233, 234, 246; Buchanan, vi. pp. 105, 110. John of Fordun, availing himself of that lady's name and of its resemblance to Finleg, has published this account of Duncan's death: "He was slain by the crime of that family who had killed both his grandfather and his great-grandfather, of whom the chief was Machabeus, son of Finele^c."—iv. cap. 44. By transforming Mac Finleg into Mac Finele, Son of Fenella, he sought to load Macbeth with odium as an hereditary murderer of kings. And in this knavery of Fordun originated the whole notion of his being thane of Angus, or, as it is sometimes styled, thane of Glamis, a residence of the lords^d of Angus, very near Forfar. Boece, who could not stomach the fiction of Mac Finele, reverted to the traditions which made him the near connexion of Malcolm and Duncan, but disguised his paternal origin under the fictitious name of Synele, and, with Fordun, placed him in the thanedom of Angus. In this manner the old, and probably true, traditions of Cromarty were upset. Thane of Angus or Glamis merely signifies son of Fenella. But Finleg, Malbrigid, and Macbeth were mormaers of the North, or country above the Grampians. See above, p. lxxx, note ^e.

However, without detracting from the infamy of these liars, I would offer this remark. All parties seem agreed to regard Macbeth, considered as an aspirant to the crown, as the son of a woman, and to find in her blood, either his claim to the crown, or his hostility to it. And if in fact it were not so, I do not clearly see how that idea should have established itself. Though Finleg M'Ruadri, mormaer of Crombath and the Croeb, was a powerful toparch, nothing indicates him, and no one considered him, as contributing to the fulfilment of the third salutation.—(II.)

seven divisions, ut dixit Colum-cille:

Seven of the children of Cruithne

The remainder of the list is so corrupt that it would be useless to attempt a translation. It is thus given in the manuscript:

The gross inaccuracies of the list of kings can only be accounted for on the supposition that the transcriber (not perhaps the transcriber of the Book of Ballymote, but some former copyist) found the names written in double columns (a thing very common in ancient Irish manuscripts), and, not perceiving that the columns were distinct, he copied them in one continuous line. On this supposition the list may be corrected as follows:

Fib .xxxiii. βλιαόνα iprige.
Fioac .xl. βλιαόνα.	δ. Þont.
Fopreano .lxx.	δ. Uprponz.
Carz oa βλιαόan ap .xx.	δ. Leo.
Ciruz .lxxx. bl.	δ. Ḡanz.

And so on, where the reader will observe that the intermixture of the Bruides with the other names will be fully explained until we come to the paragraph which has been given above without a translation; in it the corruption is much greater: but it is also explained by supposing the manuscript from which the transcriber copied to have been written thus:

Uprger .xxx. βλιαόan.	δ. Urcal.

former copy of this list of kings Oenbegan is assigned a reign of 100 years; see above, p. 155. But the present copy is so full of errors and corruptions that it is of no value.

illeabruib na Cruithneac	δ. Epe.
	δ. Garpe.
	δ. Argarpe.

And so on. The transcriber ought to have written down the first column, until he came to the words illeabruib na Cruithneac, and then to have begun the second column, δ. Pont; δ. Uppont, &c. If this conjecture be well founded, it will follow that Bruide Pont was the last of the first series, and the first of the kings who took the common title of Bruide. The words pi Ulað would seem to imply that B. Pont was King of Uladh, or of the Dalaradian Picts; but it is more probable that for pi ulað we should read ano uao. (See above, p. 156.)

The Book of Lecan contains three different copies of this section. In fact, as I have already remarked (see p. 154, supra, note ⁹), the Book of Lecan contained two copies of the Irish Nennius. In the first of these the chapter which I have marked sect. I. p. 25, supra, is omitted, and the work begins with sect. II., “Britonia insola,” &c., down to the word “Saxons” (sect. III. p. 29, supra), omitting, however, the list of British cities. Then follows:

Do bunao Cruithneac po.

Cruithne was the son of Cinge, son of Luchta, son of Parthalon, son of Agnon, son of Buan, son of Mas, son of Fathecht, son of Jadud, son of Jathfed, son of Nea, son of Lamech.

and Bruide was the name of each man of them; and they took the portions of the other men [i. e. of the former kings] for one hundred and fifty years, as it is in the books of the Cruithnians.

The second form of this ancient fragment of history occurs in the same connexion, and is, for substance, the same as that given above, pp. 50, 51. After the same account of the children of Galeoin, son of Hercules, who seized upon the islands of Orkney, there follows the genealogy of Cruithne, as quoted already, note ^k, p. 50, and then we have:

Ir he athair Cruithnech, 7 cez bla-and reigned an hundred years. These are the seven sons of Cruithne, Fid, and Fidach, and Foltla, and Fortreann, Cait, and Ce, and Ciric, as Columcille said.

Then follow the verses, as given, p. 50, after which we read:

So that they divided the land into seven portions; and each man gave his name to his own territory: as Fib, Ce, Cait, &c. Thirteen kings of them possessed [i. e. reigned]; and Onbecan, son of Cait, son of Cruithne, seized upon the supreme sovereignty of those seven divisions.

Then follows, as in the text (p. 50, supra), Fmoacra pa flaitz n-Epenn, &c.

The third copy of the same document occurs in the beginning of what I suppose to have been a second transcript^h of the Irish Nennius, which begins as in the Book of Ballymote, and the manuscript from which the text of the present work is taken, with the section, Ego Nennius, &c.

After that section we have the following:

Do bunaduib na Cruizhneach anoro bodearoa.

This is also very corrupt; and as it adds nothing to what we have learned from the former copies, it is not worth our while to attempt a translation or a correction of it. The scribe appears to have been sensible of its incorrectness when he adds the apology, Ip amlaio fín fo fpié, “Thus it was found.” It is followed by the section beginning, Órteania inópola, &c., as given above, p. 27.—(T.)

No. XXI. See page 154.

Since the note vi. p. x. was printed, I have learned that the gloss scuite, wanderer, is not found to exist elsewhere, and that suspicion therefore arises of dictionaries having been interpolated, with a view to that very purpose to which I have applied them. This has induced me to expend some further observations on the subject.

The first point in it is, that an indigenous etymology produced the word Scoti, having one T, and the O long by nature. Though Isidore's direct assertion, that Scotus was a word in their own language, may lose weight from his making it equivalent to Pictus, and explaining it to mean punctured with the painting needle,

yet it shows that he knew of no origin for it out of their own language. Isid. Hisp. Etymol. ix. tom. iii. p. 414. Ed. Arevali. It is not a Latin word; it is not British, nor did it even become such by adoption; nor is it fetched from the Teutonic tribes, in any form that I can esteem specious. But the name came up under Julian at latest, when those tribes were scarce beginning to move upon the empire's western shores and ocean: to which date other weighty considerations may be joined. Firstly, it is absurd, and out of nature, that the Roman authors should exchange a name handed down by Pytheas, Eratosthenes, Cæsar, Strabo, Pliny, Tacitus, Ptolemy, &c., to adopt one freshly introduced by Saxons, Franks, and Alans, supposing their dialects had furnished it. Secondly, the Irish historians restrict the use of it to one of their races, while foreigners employ it generally; which exhibits the usual difference between the native and foreign, proper and improper, use of a term. Let us therefore pronounce, with Isidorus, that whosoever were called Scoti were so called propriâ linguâ.

It remains doubtful who they were that were so styled, and when, and why. That Porphyry, an Asiatic sophist of the third century, had used the word Σκώτικα or Σκωτών, where Jerome put Scoticæ gentes, seems to me very unlikely. The third of the fragments of geography¹ by different authors, but ascribed to one Æthicus, is a mere extract from the first book of Orosius; and Hegesippus is a composition of the twelfth century. Therefore Ammianus, circa 390, is our first written authority; but we cannot otherwise understand him, than that those marauders were known by that name in the year of which, as well as that in which, he wrote, viz., in A. D. 360. That Constans in 343 had been opposed to Scoti may be conjectured; but it cannot be inferred from the expressions of Ammian. When the name in question began to be used in Ireland is unknown, and how it was there used is important. If it were an ancient name of the Irish for themselves, unknown to foreigners until they had improved their acquaintance with Ireland, but then adopted by them generally (as foreigners know the names German or Allemand, but have to learn the name Deutsch), it follows that the name is vernacular among the Irish people. But such (I believe) it neither is, nor ever was. Unwritten discourse does not so style them, nor does that of the Celts of Britain. Then as to writers, their date is late in Ireland, and their manner of using the word perhaps unsatisfactory. They almost all possessed some Latin learning; and a Gaelicized adoption of the Latin word Scotus may prove no more than is proved by Tighernach's plain Latin "monumenta Scotorum." It is not evident what word we are to accept for it in Irish. The poem ascribed to St. Fiech of Sletty, st. 18, employs the dative plural Scoutuibh, than which an earlier instance may (perhaps) not readily readily be found. That is Scotus with an Erse inflexion. But others have Cineadh Scuit. And a chronicle cited by Dr. O'Connor varies in the name, speaking of Rifath Scut or Scot, from whom proceeded the Scuit.—Proleg. 11, lxxxvi. But this name is taken from Mount Riphæus; the Scythian mythus, garnished with a scrap of Scythian geography. That either the Irish nation, or that major portion of it with which their mythologists connect the Scythian mythus, ever called or knew themselves by such a name, either generally, or vernacularly, or otherwise, than as some aborigines of America have learned to call themselves Indians, is opposed to the evidences of fact.

The derivation from Scythæ is strictly impossible, for no nation so styled itself, though the Greeks did so call a large body of tribes or nations.—Herod. iv. c. 6. Dr. O'Connor observing this, and that their true name was Scoloti (Herod. ibid.), tried to deduce Scoti from Scoloti; thus obstinately maintaining the historical derivation of the mythologists, but upon a different verbal etymology, and with the disadvantage of the additional and immutable consonant L. But it is the wildest excess of credulity, and the lowest prostration of the critical faculty, to believe that the equestrian nomades of the East galloped away to the shores of Gaul, and there dismounted, and took boats, to go and tramp the forests and bogs of Erin,—for no other reason than because semi-barbarous writers, of a class well-known throughout all Europe, have played some tricks with the letters S, C, and T, and (what is more) with the wrong S, C, T. The Scytho-Scolotian theory must rest on the basis of Scot having been the national and vernacular name, without interruption, from the first beginning downwards, than which nothing can appear more untrue. That very portion of the fable which insinuates truth, by making the Scot colony the latest of the Irish denominations, proves it to be a fable, because the recency of the Firbolgian name, which preceded it, is proveable, as I shall show; but will not waste more words on such a topic as this.

I have observed that Scoti was the name of the Scoti in their own language; and I have also observed, that it neither is, nor ever was (to our knowledge) the name of the Gaoidhil, or Irish nation, in their own discourse; and can scarce be said to have established itself in their writings, always excepting such as treat of the Scythian mythus. Here is something to explain, if not to reconcile.

Since the name is Irish, and the Irish nation did not call themselves so, who did? Those to whom the Romans first applied it. But who were they? The armaments of marauders who came over from Ireland to ravage the province of Britannia. Such is our original date and application of the word. The question is, whether it was an exclusive application. And the affirmative may be supposed, from its not being anywhere found earlier, and not being found national in Erin. Thus it would seem as if Irishmen were not Scoti, but expeditions of Irish warriors and pirates were. It may be here well to remind the reader, that many names more or less famous in history were not the names of nations or countries, but those of belligerent associations of men. Such were the Bagaudæ, the Vargi, the Aiteach-Tuatha, the Maroons, the Chouans, and the Pindarrees; but none more to our purpose than the Vikingar, and the Buccaneers, names terrible in the ears of foreigners, yet belonging to no nation. The first instance I know of the territorial phrase, Scotia, is in Isidore of Seville, whom David Rothe of Ossory cites at the year 630.—Tractatus, sect. iv. ap. Messingham, Flor. Insulæ SS.; Isidori Orig. xiv. cap. 6, tom. iv. p. 171. Arevali.

The same Isidorus has flatly affirmed, that Scoti signified men stained by acupuncture. And it were wrong, in our state of ignorance, to reject with flippancy a positive assertion, which may have been derived from the lost books of Ammian, or some other grave authority. Nor is the statement absurd, either in word or in matter. For scoth and sgoth are genuine Irish glosses for a flower, which will either apply to a people painted^k with flowers, as the Britons opposed to Severus were with animals, γραφαῖς ποικίλων ζῶων, or generally, to ornament by diversity of colour; ἀνθίζω, varietate distinguo.—E. Llyud; O'Reilly; Scapulæ Lex. This laxer sense shews itself in scoth, morbus (Llyud), and sgô't, "common speech" for spot or blemish, macula (ap. Gael. Soc. Dict.; and Macleod and Dewar's), seemingly in allusion to exanthematous or efflorescent maladies. And as regards the matter, it would not be improbable, but the reverse, that those Irish marauders, who first came over in fleets of coracles to support the Gwyddyl Fichti in their depredations, were of the Crutheni; and this being probable in itself, it is possible that the name thus originating may have inured to subsequent expeditions of the red Irish.

But the same gloss hath other idioms, flowing (I believe) out of the idea of flower. Scotch, chosen, selected (O'Reilly and O'Brien); scoth, choice or best of any thing; ῥοσθ na ḃḃeap, best part of the army (G. Soc. Dict.). To the same idea belongs scoth, a youth, a young lad, a son, a young shoot of a plant; and, perhaps, also scotha and scuite, said by Mr. O'Reilly to mean "brambles used for fences." Now it is certainly no violent supposition, that the bands, who sallied forth from Erin in her piratical era, both were, and called themselves, her ῥοσθ na ḃḃeap, the flower of her warriors.

Besides this masculine noun, we have the same word in the feminine, scoth, sgoth, a boat, or small vessel; scoth-long (boat-ship), a yacht.—O'Reilly; Gael. Soc.; Armstrong.

^k Scotha Hibernis idem sonat quod flores seu florum variegatio, et scotadh idem quod celeritas. —Colgan in Vit. S. Scutini vel Scothini, 11 Jan., p. 10.

strong. This will scarcely arise out of the first intention of flower. But if the “flower of warriors” had so adopted that description as to make a very name of it, then the vessels in which they plied their lawless business would, in the usual idiom of sailors, receive the same appellation, together with the gender commonly ascribed to ships. What is yon vessel? She is a pirate. What is her captain? He is a pirate. And so forth. Should any one say, that Isidore had lightly assumed Scoti to be an Erse synonyme for the Latin Picti, that the general use of the name (so rapidly diffused through the West) agrees but ill with a narrow derivation from the Crutheni; and that the desperate adventures of the Flower of Erin, in their pirate or flower boats, introduced this late but famous name, he would (as the case now stands) carry my humble approbation. When people get a new name, we may also suppose new circumstances. The Hiberni did greatly change, viz., from mere landmen to a race of pirates under sea-kings. No light reasoning in the abstract; and reinforced by the fact, that those belligerents were the first (within our knowledge) that obtained the appellation. In considering Irish words with a view to the elucidation of ancient history, it will be right to bear in mind, that letters, as well as signs of aspiration, were always introduced into the writing of words for the purpose of being pronounced; and that any eclipsing or obliterated pronunciation of a letter is necessarily an idiom of speech, subsequent in date not only to the word, but to the act of writing it.

I have withheld, in No. V. p. ix., my own firm belief concerning the Tuatha De, because the argumentation of it is long, and incapable of compression; but, upon second thought, I will here briefly state my persuasion that they were the great order or college of British Druids, flying before the face of the Romans into Ireland; and will, with equal brevity, set forth my general notion of Irish origins.

Hiberni of the ancients. Emigrations from Great Britain, made at dates unknown, but old enough for the two dialects to have diverged from their common type, of course fed from time to time by the arrival of other adventurers or refugees, and forming a population of the extremest ferity.

Firbolg. A colony of Gaulish tribes planted along South Britain, and retaining the same names they had borne in Belgium. Cæsar speaks of it as a known and historical fact, which remote facts in those countries were not.—B. G. v. 12. Within living memory Divitiacus, king of the Suessones and other Belgians, had reigned also over a great part of Britain.—B. G. ii. 4. That is to say, British and Gaulish Belgium were remembered as forming one sovereignty. Within eighty-seven years of their planting in Britain, the Fergusian Scots denied the superiority of the kings of Tara. And we shall make liberal allowance, if we say the Belgæ had held South Britain 150 years before Cæsar assailed it; a century would, perhaps, satisfy the truth.

The Firbolg invaded Ireland from Britain, not from Soissons or any other part of Belgium. Because the Dumnonii of Solinus and Ptolemy (popularly misspelt Damnonii), were the Domhnon or Domhnan of the Irish Firbolg. But they had their name from the dygnon, i. e. deeps, little valleys among steep hills,—from which their country is still called Devon,—and in Welsh Dygnaint; the permutation of the V, otherwise single F, with the M, being of perpetual occurrence, and the two consonants used indifferently in manuscripts of no vast age. See Lhuyd's Archæologia, pp. 221, 228. So the Irish MH sounds V. The same word is Doumn, Douvn, and Doun, in the Armorican; and Dom Lepelletier found, in three lives of St. Gwenolè, pars Domnonica, pagos Domnonicos, and rura Domnoniensa, from which he collects that there was also a Domnonia among the hills and vales of the Armorican Cornwall.—Dict. Bret. in Doun. The name of the Firdomhnan described the surface of a particular district in the greater island; while the Firbolgian tribe Firbolg, or Belgæ by excellence, were, I suppose, from the royal demesnes of Belgica, near the Venta Belgarum.

But a people do not thus indelibly receive a name from the face of their country, till they have been long and fully settled there. Therefore the Firbolgian conquest was not much older than Cæsar's time, if it were not a good bit later. And it was the first influx of a civilization, rude indeed, but much superior to that of the Hiberni; the first emerging of a gens efferâ towards the higher rank of the gentes barbaræ.

Tuatha De. The people of Gods, or the people of the [i. e. dear and sacred to the] Gods. When the druidic college could no longer maintain in Britain its vast power and mysterious rites, it removed them to Erin, their only sure asylum. They obtained superiority in that island more by their treasures, arts, and learning, and the engines of religious awe, and as gods or divine men, a tribe sacer interpresque Deorum, than as men, by arms and numbers. At this date, the druidical magic was systematically organized in Ireland. They have been called Danann, either falsely, from the more modern Dani, or ancient Danai; but rather from dan, art, poem, song (see Keating, p. 48, O'Connor's ed.), which derivation, if it do not express the Druids, sufficiently expresses the Bards.

The time of the removal of the hierarchy was after the unsuccessful wars of Cynobeline's sons against the Romans; of which events the capture of Caractacus, in A. D. 50, was the cardinal point. I have already said that the argument vastly exceeds the space now at my disposal, and I must, therefore, be excused for speaking meo periculo. But Firbolg, saith Gilda Coeman, ruled during thirty-seven¹ years. Therefore, with their their fulcrum in A. D. 50, our compasses will sweep through A. D. 13 for the advent of the Firbolg; and I suppose it was thereabouts. The magical dynasty prevailed, according to the Psalter of Cashel, during 197 years, when the era of the Gaoidhil^m arises. That is to say, the Hiberni, or general population, quasi-indigenous, of Ireland, resumed that superiority which the Brito-Belgic and Druidical migrations of Britons had wrested from them, changed and improved in its social energies by the infusion of those more advanced races. This falls, as it were, upon the year 247, according to the Irish chronologers, combined with my date of the transfer of Druidism. But the emancipation of the Gaoidhil from the yoke of the Tuatha De is myth-historically identified with the rise and establishment of the Scoti. And the year 247 is only seven years before the accession of Cormac M'Art, to whom I have (by a curious coincidence, for I had not made this computation) conjecturally assigned the beginnings of the Scoti, as being the first recorded sea-king. But the year 50 was only named as the cardinal year in the misfortunes of Cynobeline's house, and not with any idea of its being the actual year of that great transaction. Therefore there is not really any discrepancy at all. I cannot refrain from thinking, that the durations assigned by the seannachies to these fabulous dynasties (durations as short and modest as the dates are remote and extravagant) were based in truth, and may serve us for clues to its investigation.—(H.)

The following documents seem worthy of preservation, and will give the reader some of the principal authorities for the history of the parties mentioned in the legend of St. Cairnech:

I. The first is a legend preserved in the book of Dubhaltach, or Dudley Mac Firbis, in the possession of the Earl of Roden, p. 112. It relates to the history of Muredhach Mac Eoghan, and his wife, Erc, the maternal aunt of St. Carnech.

But its history, meaning, and affinities, seem quite unascertained; it belongs only to the oridaughter of Loarn, King of Alba, was the mother of those four, ut dixit [poeta],

Four sons had Muireadhach
By Eare, of noble worthiness, Muireheartach, Tigearnach, Fearadhach, and Moen.

After the death of the son of Eoghan,
Fergus, son of Conal Gulban, espoused Earc, the daughter of Loarn; and she bore four sons more for him, viz., Fedhlim, Loarn, Brennainn, and Seudna, as was said,

Four sons had Fergus by Ere,
The same were worthy:
Fedhlimidh, and Loarn, Brennainn, and Seudna.

The aforesaid Eare came to Cairneach in penitence; and such was the greatness of her penitence that she knelt at every second ridge from Tory island to where Saint Cairneach was, in the district of Ross Oiligh (or Ailighⁿ), at the same time that a dew of blood was issuing from the top of every one of her fingers as she approached Cairneach. I hail thee, said Cairneach, O Eare, and thou shalt go to heaven; and one of every two^o worthy brated palace of Aileach, near Londonderry, for a full account of which see the Ordnance Memoir of the parish of Templemore, p. 27, sq. The whole district was anciently called Tir-Ailigh (ibid.,

p. 297); and probably Ross Ailigh was the place now called the Rosses, on the Foyle, near Derry. Ere is said to have passed in penitential pilgrimage from Tory island to Ross Ailigh,

i. e. from one extremity to the other of the district belonging to her race.

 tions from Cairneach, her spirit passed into eternal glory.

Cairneach blessed that spot, and hence its name, viz., Ceall Earca [Earc's cell], where Earc died; and Cairneach left a person in charge of the place, viz., Criodan^p the Bishop.

This is from the copy of the Book of Lecan Meic Fírbisigh.

 cheartach Mac Earca named.

Muircheartach, the son of Muireadhach and of Earc, had five sons, viz., Fearghus,

 Colgan mentions as a disciple of St. Petroc, or Pereuse, abbot of Padstow (i. e. Petrocstowe), in Cornwall, who died about A. D. 564. Of Criodan Colgan says: “Cridanus colitur in

There can be very little doubt that “the old book,” whose author was unknown, which is spoken of and quoted in the foregoing passage, is the identical legend of St. Carnech, which is for the first time printed above, p. 172, seq.; but whether Mac Firbis quoted it from the book of Ballymote, or from an older copy, which contained also other similar matter, we have now no means of ascertaining.

II. The following curious verses will also throw light on the history of Muredach and Ere, the daughter of Loarn. They are taken from a poem beginning Enna oalta Charbpe éruaíθ, “Enna, the pupil of hardy Cairbre;” of which there is a very good copy in p. 163 of a manuscript volume of bardic poetry, of great interest and historical value, the property of the late O’Conor Don, by whose kindness it was deposited in trust with the Royal Irish Academy, that its contents might be examined and transcribed by Irish scholars.

 With his noble, illustrious, great sons, Took the Druim^h subject to this tribute,
 And hence they were called Fir Dromaⁱ.

Although the foregoing curious poem was never before published, yet it was not unknown to the indefatigable Colgan^k; and it evidently forms the authority for the following historical narrative, which he has given in his Life of St. Carnech: “ Mortuo deinde secundo conjuge Fergusio, Erca a quatuor filiis, quos eidem generat, in suæ viduitatis solatium et sustentationem donatur supramemorato prædio nunc Druim-ligean nunc Cruchan-ligean appellari solito: quod et ipsa sub mortem condito testamento S. Carnecho sobrino, de filiorum consensu perpetuo legavit; relictâque Murchertacho cæterisque filiis ex priori thoro susceptis suâ regiâ suppellectile, eosdem, ultra ad hoc se offerentes, obligavit ad centum capita ex quolibet armentorum genere eidem S. Carnecho ejusve successori quotannis in perpetuum numeranda. Hæc autem pia et perampla devotæ Principis legata, toto tempore, quo S. Carnechus supervixit, et

^s Hostings.—The successors of St. Carnech, it appears, preferred the tribute to the land, which was at that time burdened with the charges of expeditions and hostings, the maintenance of troops, and also the obligation of serving personally in the wars, from which the ecclesiastical character of the owners did not protect them.

^h The Druim: i. e. Druim Lighean.

ⁱ Fir Droma.—They were called Uí Ethach

Droma Lighean, the descendants of Eochaidh of Druim Lighean, or Fearsa Droma Lighean, the men of Druim-Lighean. See the genealogy of the O'Donnells, who were the chiefs of the Fir Droma, in the Appendix to O'Donovan's Four Masters, p. 2426.

^k Colgan speaks of the author of this poem only under the general terms of “author quidam anonymus, qui videtur ante octingentos vel amplius annos vixisse.”

et annis insuper viginti ab ejus morte, rata et firma manserunt, et fideliter solvebantur. Verum postea Cassanus et Massanus qui S. Carnecho in monasterii regimine successerant, negligentiam aliquam in annuâ illâ armentorum pensione solvendâ, vel jam commissam videntes, vel ne in posterum committeretur metuentes, consenserunt ad dominium prædicti prædii in filios posterosve Muredacii ea conditione transferendum, quod dudum statuta pensio, quotannis, ut olim consuevit, integre solveretur. Hac ergo transactione peracta, Fergusius supra memorato Murchertacho natus, ejusque filii prædictum prædium possidendum susceperunt, et annis pluribus retinuerunt, usque scilicet ad tempora Donnaldi filii Aidi Hiberniæ Monarchæ, qui ex supra memorati Conalli semine oriundus, ab anno Domini 623 ad 639 regnavit.”—Acta SS., p. 782.

From the foregoing documents it would seem that, at the time when Ere became St. Carnech’s penitent, he was at Ross-Ailigh. That after the liberal endowments bequeathed to him by Ere, he established a monastery at Drium Lighcan, or perhaps enlarged and enriched that which had been founded by St. Columba at Cluain Laodh, now Clonleigh¹.

There are also some data furnished in the poem for determining the year of St. Carnech’s death. The bard tells us that the successors of St. Carnech, twenty years after his death, consented to give up the manor of Druim-Lighcan, and that Fergus, the son of Muirheartach, was the sovereign who accepted this surrender, and resumed possession of the Druim, from which his posterity were termed Fir-Droma.

But Fergus, according to O’Flaherty’s Chronology, reigned conjointly with his brother Domhnall for one year only, viz., A. D. 565–6. The Four Masters place the commencement of the reign of Domhnall and Fergus in 559, and their death in 561. But the Annals of Ulster favour O’Flaherty’s date. It is probable, however, that Fergus entered into possession of Druim-Lighcan when he was chief of Tyrone, and before he became king of Ireland. Therefore St. Carnech must have died before the year 545, if we adopt the dates of O’Flaherty; or before the year 539, if we adopt, with Colgan, the chronology of the Four Masters.

There is another St. Carnech mentioned in Irish history, who is said to have been bishop of Tuilen, now Dulane, near Kells, in the county of Meath; but his memory is now altogether forgotten there. Colgan is of opinion that this is not the same as the Carnech who is the subject of the foregoing remarks. For his day is not the 28th of March, septentrionem, satis vicinæ; in alterutra ipsum Abbatis, et per consequens Episcopi munus excreuisse existimo.”—Acta SS., p. 782, c. 2.

March, but the 16th of May, under which date his death is thus recorded in the Feilire of Aenghus:

ḂAS CAID CHARNIḂ FIRḂALC.

“The illustrious death of Carnech the truly powerful.”

And the gloss adds:

.i. Cairnech o Tuilen i fear Che- i. e. Carnech of Tuilen, in the neigh-nanna, Ḃ do Ḃreacnaib Corn do. bourhood of Cenannas [Kells], and he is of the Britons of Corn [Cornwall].

By this it appears that St. Carnech of Tuilen was not a native of Ireland, but of Cornwall, and therefore Colgan supposes him to be the same as St. Cernach or Carantach, whose day in the Calendar of the British Church is the 16th of May, and who flourished about a century before the other St. Carnech, having been, as it is said, a contemporary of St. Patrick.—Trias. Thaum., p. 231. (Acta SS., p. 783, c. 8). It is probable that his memory was introduced into Ireland, and a church dedicated to him at Tuilen, by the three tuatha or septs of the British, i. e. Welshmen, who settled there, according to the topographical poem of O’Dugan, and who were called Com̄tation CairniḂ, or Cairnech’s Congregation.

It is of this Carnech, or Carantoch of Tuilen, that Dudley Mac Firbis probably speaks when he says (p. 749, MS. Royal Irish Academy):

Cairnecc, do Ḃreacnaib Corn do, ar Cairnech, he was of the Britons of uime rin a Ḃfear Cairnecc rin .i. Cair- Corn, and hence he is called Cairnech anluio rin uirioḂ Giolla Caomhain i Jothacar, son of Alt. This is what Giolla Ḃairuib na m-Ḃreacnaib. Caomhain relates in the Histories of the Britons.

The History of the Britons by Giolla Caomhain, who died about A. D. 1072, is a work which is not now known to exist, unless it be the same as the Leabhar Breathnach, or Irish version of Nennius, here published: for O’Reilly states (Trans. Ibero-Gælic Society, p. cxxii.), that in the Book of Hy-Many there was a copy of the Leabhar Breathnach, at the head of which was a memorandum stating that Nennius was the author, but that Giolla Caomhain had translated it into Irish. The genealogy of St. Cairnech, however, as quoted by Dudley Mac Firbis, does not now occur in any of the copies of this work which exist in Dublin.—(Z’)

“But since the Picti and Scoti have here been mentioned, I have thought it relevant to explain who these nations were, and whence, and why, they were brought into Britannia, as I have gathered it from divers histories.

“Histories relate that the Picti, whom Virgil also calls Agatirsi^m, had their dwellings near the Scitic marshes. And Servius, commenting upon Virgil, and expounding that placeⁿ ‘Picti Agatirsi,’ says: ‘We call the same people Picti whom we call Agatirsi, and they are called Picti as being stigmatized, since they are wont to be stigmatized and cauterized for the abundance of phlegm. And these people are the same as the Gothi. Since, then, the continual punctures superinduce scars, their bodies become, as it were, painted, and they are called Picti from these cauteries overgrown^o with scars.’

“So, when that tyrant Maximus went over from Britannia to Francia, with all the men and forces and arms of the island, to assume the empire, Gratian and Valentinian, brothers and partners in the empire, transported^p this Gothic nation, brave and strong in war, either allied or subject to themselves, and [won]^q by imperial benefits, from the boundaries of Scitia to the northern parts of Britannia, to infest the Britons, and call

ⁿ Neither there nor elsewhere hath the extant Servius (Edit. Masvicii) one syllable of this; nor has he anywhere any mention of the Gothi.

^o This disfiguring of the features by cicatrization was an entirely distinct practice, and limited to the face. The Hunnish tribes were those who delighted in such deformity. Ammianus says they cicatrized their new-born infants.—xxx. cap. 2. Others relate that they inflicted these scars on occasion of grief and mourning. But the statements are not incompatible. The poet Sidonius only means bloody when inflicted by red,—

“vultuque minaci
Ruba cicatricum vestigia defodisse.”—Ad Avitum, 239.

^p Manifestly false; for Eumenius of Autun, in the year 297, spoke of the Picti in Britannia. Paneg. Constantio. cap. xi.

^q Imperialibus tam beneficiis; tam being the last syllable of some passive participle.

call home the tyrant with all the youth of the island, which he had taken away never destined to return.

“ But they, being strong in the warlike valour natural to Goths, nevertheless finding the island stript (as I have said) of men and forces, occupied no small part of its northern provinces, never meaning to revisit their own country, and of pirates becoming settlers.

“ In process of time (having married wives from the neighbouring Hybernia since they could have none from the Britons) they took into alliance the Hybernic nation, also called Scotian; and gave them the maritime part of the land they had occupied, and the nearest to their own country, where the sea is narrow, which is called Galweidia, where they afterwards became unanimous in infesting the Britons, and advancing their own frontiers. And it is of them that Gildas, in his treatise de Excidio Britonum, says: ‘ Then Britannia, destitute of armed soldiers, and deprived of the vigorous young men of the country, who, having followed the above-mentioned tyrant, never returned home, being now entirely ignorant of the use of war, began first to be oppressed and trampled by two very fierce nations, the Picti from the north, and the Scoti from the north-west.’ &c., &c.^s. And now I will briefly relate how the mighty nation of Picti, after so many victories, has come to nothing.

“ When the Saxons had occupied the island, as I have said, and concluded a stable peace with the Picti, the Scoti (who had been joined to the Picti, and invited by them to inhabit their country) seeing that the Picti (although now fewer^t, because of the affinity of Hibernia) were yet much their superiors in arms and courage, had recourse to their wonted and, as it were, innate treacheries^u [præditiones], in which they surpass other nations. They invited^v all the magnates of the Picti to a banquet, and when an excess and profusion of meat and drink had been taken, and they perceived their opportunity, they removed the pegs which supported the planks, whereby they

^s The Editor has omitted much of the quotations from Gildas.

^t If the text is sound, it probably means that the Pictish superiority of numbers was diminished by the succours which the Scots obtained from their mother country.

^u For this word, præditiones, which occurs twice, and is not intelligible to me, I suppose we ought to read præditiones.

^v This tale, howsoever fabulous, and borrowed from the story of Hengist, puts on its true footing the pretended total extirpation of the Picts by Kenneth M^cAlpin. It was an extirpation of the rihs, or royal Picts, in whom the crown was heritable, of the whole tanistry (if I may so term it) of the realm.

all fell, by a wonderful stratagem, up to their hams into the hollow of the benches whereon they were sitting, so that they could by no means rise; and then straightway they slaughtered them all, taken by surprise, and fearing no such treatment from their kinsfolk and confederates, whom they had joined in fealty to their own enfeoffment^a, and who were their allies in war. In this manner the more warlike and powerful of the two nations entirely disappeared; but the other, in all respects far inferior, having gained the advantage in the moment of so great a treachery [prediction], obtained even unto this day the whole of that country, from sea to sea, which after their own name they called Scotia.”—(H.)

No. XXIV. Addenda et Corrigenda.

Page 26, note ^m, “The Welsh also call themselves Gwydhil, and their country Tir Gwydhil.” This is a mistake. A part of Anglesea (or the whole) was in the possession of the Irish in the fifth and sixth centuries; and certain monuments there are called Carrig y Wyddyl, “Stones of the Gael;” some rude old houses are called tre'r Wyddelodd, “Houses of the Gael;” and a prince of Mona living in those times was styled the Brenin o Wyddelodd. If there ever was a Tir y Gwyddyl, out of Albany, it was probably that colony in Mona. But that places the name in opposition to Cymmry, and not in synonyme with it. The statement that the Welsh call themselves Gwyddyl, or their country Tir y Gwyddyl, is altogether a mistake.

P. 30, note ^f, line 18. It is, however, possible that the discreditable sense of the word haven may be a secondary and modern one, its older meaning having been void of reproach. During the long time since I penned this note, I have concluded this much, that Geoffrey’s original was neither brought from, nor written in, Armórica.—(H.)

P. 103, note ^s, col. 1, line 8, for “is usually attributed to the year 473,” read, “is variously dated from 456 to 473.”

P. 111, line 6, “his shoulder.” That ysgwyd, a shield, was mistaken for ysgwydd, a shoulder, is the convincing remark of Mr. Price in his Hanes Cymru.—See the notes to Schulz on Welsh tradition, p. 10. This easy mistake was probably further facilitated by the use of both words. Geoffrey says: “adaptat humeris quoque suis clypeum.” Two of his Welsh translators have tarian ar ysgwydd; but we find poets affecting the gingle of ysgwyd ar ysgwydd.—(H.)

P. 130, line (of the poem) 18, am p̄and̄ Ɔpc̄aũ-ı̄t̄b̄ı̄. This is very obscure and corrupt; am p̄and̄ is not properly “in the portion,” although it has been so conjecturally jecturally rendered: to be so it ought to be ἰρροῖο, or ἰρροῖο. Mr. Curry proposes to read am panō epcauiz bi, for am pon epcaileāō ambiz, “when first their existence was discovered.” Epcaileāō is an old word which is thus explained in a Glossary in the Library of Trinity College: .i. eipneāō, uz epz, m bi bpeēēam na bi epcauizēc 7c. ap ip tpe epcaileāō faillpīgēteap anēēap nī beaēāō .i. apiz tpa pū epneāō fuppamāgēteap, nō faillpīgēteap anēēap m beaēā. “Ercaileadh, i. e. eirneadh (solution), as in the saying, ‘There will be no judge who will not be able to solve (ercailtech), &c. ;’ and, ‘For it is by solution (ercaileadh) that all the difficult questions of life are made clear,’ i. e. through erneadh (solution), all the questions of life are made clear or explained.”—(T).

Ibid., line 22 (of the poem), tauine. This word is translated understood, on the authority of the following passage from the Leabhar Breac, fol. 27, b. a.

(sic). Others think that they spake in the Hebrew language, and that it sounded with the sweet accent of his own language to each.

The allusion, as the reader will evidently perceive, is to Acts, ii. 4-11.

Ibid., line 26 (of the poem), ppilāēap 7an lun. In the same glossary already quoted laēap is explained by mōill, ready prepared: and lun by lean no paill, defect or neglect.—See line 54.

P. 284, note 1. The word bpeacāō may be the third person plural of the verb bpeacūm, to variegate, adorn, illustrate, colour with spots: and the meaning is, that Malcolm was king thirty years, a period that has been celebrated or illustrated, blazoned in poems or verses.—(T).

P. liv, Additional Notes, line 26, “Or silver-hip.” Observe the strictly analogous names of the Danannian king, Nuadh Silver-hand. Compare also the Druidess Gealcosach, or white-legs, whose tomb is shewn in Inishowen.—(H).

P. xlviij, lines 5, 6, “We read in Lib. Ballymote, that Bruide Cnit. . . was King of Ulster.—Ap. Pinkerton, i. 502-504.” The passage certainly does so stand in the Book of Ballymote, Cnit pū ulad; “Cnit [or Cint], King of Uladh.”—See p. xcii. And it is also stated in the Book of Lecan (see p. lxvii. supra), that Urchal Bruide-pont was thirty years King of Uladh. But these passages, particularly the former, are so corrupt, that no safe inference can be drawn from them.

There is in the Book of Lecan another copy of the Cruithnian story, besides those given above, p. lxx. et seq., and p. xciii. et seq.; but it is so nearly the same as the others, that it has not been thought worth while to transcribe it, especially as it is very corrupt, and adds nothing to the information given us in the copies which have been printed. It occurs in the history of the reign of Herimon, in a long account of the Milesian invasion of Ireland^x.

The allusion to the King of Uladh, or Ulidia, in this tract, is as follows:

Urcealbruide pont .xxx. b. ipriuge nut. Ipoe arbearēa bruige fpu gac fear dib 7 penda na fear.	Urcalbruide Pont thirty years in the kingdom of Uladh. It is from him the name of Bruide is given to every man of them and to the divisions of their lands.
---	---

In this list of the kings the same confused mixture of the Bruides with the other names occurs which has been already noticed in the Book of Ballymote, and originated, probably, in the same cause.—See p. xcii., supra.

Hence, although the name is written above Urcalbruide Pont, yet it is clear that two names, Urcal and Bruide Pont, are run together; and that the observation applies properly to Pont, or Bont (see above, p. 156), who is called Bout by Pinkerton.

It will be seen also, that in the reading of this passage, as given above, p. 156, and also in that given from another part of the Book of Lecan (p. xci., supra), there is no mention of Uladh. There we find, instead of ipriuge nut. or nulcā, as in the former place. xxx. aṃo uā, and in the latter, xxx. nīg uā, intimating that after Bruide Pont there were thirty kings, who bore the common title of Bruide.

Which of these was the true reading it is now impossible to say; but it is evident that we must be very cautious in drawing any inference from the mention of Uladh in so very corrupt a passage.—(T.)

P. cviii, note ^f, Massan and Cassan. These saints are mentioned in the poem on the Saints of the Cinel Laeghaire, in a poem beginning Næm pencap næm inpu Fa il (Book of Ballymote, fol. 126, b. b.).

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

AT a General Meeting of the IRISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY, held in the Board Room of the Royal Irish Academy, on Saturday, the 19th day of December, 1846,

THE MOST NOBLE THE MARQUIS OF KILDARE in the Chair,

The Secretary read the following Report from the Council :

“ The month of December being the time of the year in which the Council are bound, by the by-law passed on the 10th of July, 1844, to summon a General Meeting of the Society, they beg leave to lay before your Lordship, and the Members here present, a Report of the proceedings during the past year, and to congratulate the Society on being now met together to celebrate its sixth anniversary.

“ Since the last General Meeting, held on the 19th of December, 1845, twenty-two new Members have been elected^a ; whose names are as follows :

His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.
The Earl of Portarlington.
Viscount Suirdale.

Rev. Beaver H. Blacker.
*Patrick Chalmers, Esq.
John David Chambers, Esq.
William Chambers, Esq.

Thomas

Thomas Clarke, Esq.
 *Rev. Edward F. Day.
 *William Donnelly, Esq.

John Flanedy, Esq.
 John Hyde, Esq.

*The Right Hon. Henry Labouchere,
 M. P.

The Rev. Daniel M'Carthy.

John Nolan, Junior, Esq.

Denis O'Conor, Esq.

R. More O'Ferrall, Esq., M. P.

Richard O'Reilly, Esq.

Henry Thompson Redmond, Esq.

John Sadleir, Esq.

Rev. Charles Strong.

William Robert Wilde, Esq.

“ The Society has to lament the death, since the last Meeting, of the following seven Members, one of whom was a Member of the Council, and a zealous friend to the Society, at its original formation :

The Bishop of Kildare.
 Viscount Templetown.
 Sir Aubrey de Vere, Bart.
 James Gibbons, Esq.

Thomas Goold, Esq., Master in Chancery.

James A. Maconoehie, Esq.

John Smith Furlong, Esq., Q. C.

“ The number of Members on the Books of the Society now amounts to 443, including 60 Life Members.

“ Since the last Annual Meeting, the Council have issued to all Members, who have subscribed for the year 1845, the valuable work edited by Mr. Hardiman, from a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, entitled, A Chorographical Description of West or H-iar Connaught, written, A. D. 1684, by Roderick O'Flaherty, Esq., author of the 'Ogygia.' This volume is illustrated with a map of West Connaught, and a fac-simile of O'Flaherty's hand-writing, and extends to 483 pages, including the Introduction.

“ The delay in the publication of this volume was chiefly owing to the editor's absence from Dublin, but also, in some degree, to his having discovered, after the work was far advanced, a great number of original documents connected with the history of West Connaught, which it seemed very desirable to print in the Appendix, as a more favourable opportunity of publishing these important records might not occur hereafter ; the Council, therefore, willingly acceded to Mr. Hardiman's wishes, to whom they take this opportunity of returning their sincere thanks.

“ The volume contains a mass of topographical and historical matter of very unusual interest and value. It is highly creditable to Mr. Hardiman's learning and research, and the Council are happy to find that it has been most favourably received by the Members of the Society.
 and

“ The Council had hoped to have been able to give, along with the foregoing volume, Cormac’s Glossary. But in this intention, which was announced at the last annual Meeting, they have been doubly disappointed. The unexpected size to which Mr. Hardiman’s Appendix and notes extended, and the consequent expense of the work, render it impossible to put together, as an equivalent for one year’s subscription, two such costly books. O’Flaherty’s West Connaught has actually cost the Society sixteen shillings per copy ; and when to this are added the expenses of delivery, salaries, and other charges of the year, it will be seen that the Council would be wanting in their duty as Trustees of the Society’s funds, if they should persevere in their original intention of giving any additional volume, and especially one so costly as Cormac’s Glossary, to the Members of the year 1845. They hope, therefore, that the Society will perceive the necessity which exists for a change in the arrangement proposed by the Council of that year, and announced in the last Annual Report.

“ Another source of disappointment has arisen from the unexpected obstacles that have been experienced in the preparation of Cormac’s Glossary for the Press. No person who has never actually engaged in such studies can adequately estimate the real difficulties of this work, filled as it is with obsolete words and obscure allusions, fragments of the languages spoken by Northmen, Picts, and British in the tenth century, and quotations from Brehon laws and ancient poems, all of which must be sought for in our manuscript libraries, without the aid of catalogue or index of any kind, except such as the private labours of Mr. O’Donovan and Mr. Curry have provided for themselves. These difficulties are so frequent, and arise so unexpectedly, that the Council feel it to be impossible to say when this important and laborious work will be ready for delivery ; but they can promise that no pains or labour shall be spared to bring it out as speedily as is consistent with the necessary attention to accuracy.

“ The first volume of the Miscellany of the Irish Archæological Society, constituting the book for the present year, is now in course of distribution to the Members.

“ In addition to the contents, as announced in the Report of last year, there have been added some short pieces, particularly The Annals of Ireland, from the year 1443 to 1468, translated from the Irish, by Dudley Firbisse, or, as he is more usually called, Duaid Mac Firbis, for Sir James Ware, in the year 1666.

“These Annals, which have been quoted by Ware, Harris, and others, are of considerable value and importance, although never before published. They have been translated from an Irish original, now lost, or at least unknown, which was evidently in the hands of the Four Masters, and has been made use of by them as an authority, for they have frequently transcribed it verbatim in their Annals.

“The Council propose to give for the year 1847, The Irish Version of the ‘Historia Britonum’ of Nennius, with a translation and notes, by the Secretary; and additional notes, and an Introduction, by the Hon. Algernon Herbert. A considerable portion of this work is printed, and it is hoped that nothing will prevent its completion in the course of a few months.

“Of the projected publications of the Society, it will be necessary now to speak very briefly.

“It was announced in the last Annual Report, that the Council had in view a collection of the Latin annalists of Ireland. Of these there are already in the Press :

“1. The Annals, by John Clyn, of Kilkenny, which have been transcribed from a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin, collated with a copy in the Bodleian Library, Oxford; and will be edited, with notes, by the Rev. Richard Butler.

“2. The Annals of Thady Dowling, Chancellor of Leighlin, which will be edited, with notes, by Aquilla Smith, Esq., M.D., from a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

“3. The Annals of Henry Marlborough; from a MS. in the Cottonian Library, British Museum, collated with an imperfect copy in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

“To these it is probable that one or two others of the minor Annals may be added, which, although in themselves of little moment, are valuable, as they have been quoted by our principal historians, and are an essential part of the original sources of Irish history.

“Of the other works proposed for publication, the Council are happy to be able to state that one, which has been long announced, and which has been looked for

for by many Members of the Society with much anxiety, is now nearly ready for the printer. The Macariae Excidium, or, Destruction of Cyprus, by Colonel Charles O'Kelly, giving an account of the Civil Wars of Ireland under James II., was one of the first works undertaken by this Society. It was copied from a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, and two or three sheets of it were actually printed, when it was discovered that the work had been advertised, and was then on the eve of publication by the Camden Society of London. Subsequently, however, by the liberality of Professor Mac Cullagh, a Latin copy of the work, in a MS. coeval with its author, was placed at the disposal of the Council, and Denis Henry Kelly, Esq., of Castle Kelly, a descendant of the author, kindly proposed to edit it, and had actually completed a very correct translation of the Latin copy, when another MS., in English (also coeval with the author), was discovered, and a transcript of it procured for the Society by Mr. Kelly. The means were thus supplied for putting forth a much more correct and authentic text than that of the Camden Society; the Council, therefore, resolved to resume their original intention of bringing out this curious work; especially as they were fortunate enough to induce Mr. O'Callaghan to promise his valuable aid in the illustration of it. Within the last fortnight Mr. O'Callaghan has completed his portion of the task, and has placed in the hands of the Council a collection of notes, which cannot fail to prove highly interesting to the student of our history, and for which he is entitled to the warmest thanks of the Society. This work will, therefore, be put to press without delay, as soon as the promised transcript of the English version of it is received from Mr. Kelly. The work will necessarily be expensive, but the Council are resolved to undertake it, in the hope that the great interest of its subject, and the well-known qualifications of its annotator for illustrating that portion of our history, will induce the Irish public so far to support the Society, as to cover the expenses of its publication.

“A second volume of the Irish Archæological Miscellany will also be immediately undertaken. The Council are already in possession of some materials for this work, such as a Latin translation of a portion of the Annals of the Four Masters, supposed to be from the pen of Dr. Lynch, author of “Cambrensis Eversus,” the Obits of Lusk, &c.; but they would earnestly invite other contributions.

“Other works are also in contemplation, which the want of funds compels

the Council to defer. Of these the following are ready for immediate publication :

“ I. The Annals of Inisfallen. The original intention was to edit these Annals from a copy preserved in the Library of Trinity College, and partly published, under the name of the Annals of Inisfallen, by Dr. O’Conor. Misled by the high authority of that distinguished scholar, the Council, at the beginning of the present year, engaged Mr. Curry and Mr. O’Donovan in the task of preparing a transcript of the Trinity College MS. for publication. But it was very soon found that this MS. was not at all what Dr. O’Conor had supposed it to be ; it turned out to be a modern compilation from the old Inisfallen Annals and other sources, and, in short, of no authority whatsoever. It has, therefore, been resolved to adopt as a text the real Annals of Inisfallen, preserved in the Bodleian Library. In the preface to the work, the history of the Dublin copy, with the reasons for regarding it as unworthy of credit, will be given at length.

“ II. The History of the Boromean Tribute, from a MS. in the Library of Trinity College, edited, with a translation and notes, by Mr. Eugene Curry, has for some time been nearly ready for the Press. This work relates to an interesting period of Irish history, which is comparatively little known, and of which but very scanty notices occur in our popular historians. But it will be a book of some 300 or 400 pages, and want of funds has hitherto delayed its publication.

“ The same reason also compels the Council to postpone the more expensive publications which have been announced, such as the Annals of Ulster, and the Book of Hymns, although both of them are works of the highest interest, and importance. Some progress, however, has been made in preparing them for the Press. A transcript of the Annals of Ulster, the property of the Secretary, has been placed at the disposal of the Council. It was copied by Mr. Curry from the ancient MS. in the Library of Trinity College, and has been collated with the Bodleian MS. by Mr. O’Donovan, who was sent to Oxford by the Council for the purpose. The Book of Hymns has also been transcribed from the original MS. in the Library of Trinity College ; but the only other copy of it known to exist is said to be in the possession of the Franciscan College of St. Isidore, at Rome, and is consequently beyond the reach of the Society. It is a great pity that the funds for the publication of this valuable manuscript cannot be procured. The Manuscript is itself of the seventh or eighth century, and as it was, no doubt, transcribed from much earlier documents, it may be taken as representing the doctrine and devotion of the Irish Church in the age of St. Columba, when Ireland was so justly known throughout Europe as “Insula Sanctorum.” A Hymnarium of the seventh century is a literary treasure that ought not to be left any longer in obscurity.

“Of the other works suggested for publication, the Council have nothing to say in addition to what was stated by their predecessors in the Report of last year; they are precluded by the deficiency of funds from undertaking any such expensive publications as the Dinnseanchus, or the Brehon Laws, which present difficulties of so peculiar a nature. For such great works, therefore, they can only hope to prepare the way, and they cannot but flatter themselves that the publications of this Society have already done much to awaken a taste for Irish literature, and to arouse the Public to some little sense of the national disgrace which rests upon us, for allowing these invaluable monuments of antiquity to slumber so long on the shelves of our libraries.

“The Council have it in contemplation to publish, as soon as they find it possible, the Topographical Poems of O’Dugan and O’Heerin, with illustrative notes by Mr. O’Donovan, a work that cannot fail to prove interesting to the Public; but so many circumstances, over which they have no control, may combine to delay this design, that they cannot undertake as yet to fix the time when this publication may be expected. The same remark applies to Duald Mac Firbis’s Account of the Firbolgs and Danes of Ireland, and to the Naemh Seanchus, or History of the Saints of Ireland, attributed to Aengus the Culdee or some of his disciples, and preserved in the Book of Lecan. In short, there is the greatest abundance of interesting and important materials, and funds alone are wanting for giving them to the Public.

“It will be remembered by the Society that in former Reports the Council more than once declared that they were overdrawing the funds of the Society, and giving to the Members a higher value for their subscriptions than the disposable means of the Society justified. This was done for the purpose of bringing the Society into notice, and of enabling the Irish public to judge of the great abundance of the materials that exist, as well as of the manner in which it was proposed to render our ancient literature accessible to students. In this there is no doubt the Council judged wisely; but the time is now come when a different course must be pursued. The experience of five years, during which the limited number of 500 members has never been obtained, proves clearly the small amount of interest that is felt for the objects of the Society; and it is, therefore, become the duty of the Council to announce, that the number of pages hitherto published in the year must henceforth be very seriously diminished, unless a large accession of additional Members can be obtained. If every Member would engage to procure one new Member in the course of the next year, the means of bringing out the works in preparation would be in a great measure supplied; but if the Society remains at its present limit, Members must be content to perceive a very sensible diminution in the bulk of our annual publications."

^b See Report for 1842 (prefixed to the Battle of Magh Ragh), p. 4. Report for 1845 (prefixed to O’Flaherty’s West Connaught), p. 6.

The Report having been read, it was moved by the Provost of Trinity College, seconded by Lieutenant General Birch, and

"RESOLVED,—That the Report now read be received and printed, and circulated amongst the Members of the Society."

Moved by N. P. O'Gorman, Esq., seconded by Charles Mac Donnell, Esq., and

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

AT a General Meeting of the IRISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY, held in the Board Room of the Royal Irish Academy, on Wednesday, the 22nd day of December, 1847,

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEINSTER in the Chair,

The Secretary read the following Report from the Council:

“ The labours of the Irish Archæological Society have now been continued for a period of seven years, and the Council, on laying before you their annual Report of the progress and prospects of the Society, are compelled, with great regret, to abandon the tone of hope with which they have hitherto addressed you.

“ They regret to say that the experience of the last seven years has forced upon them the conviction, that very little interest is felt by the Irish public for the publication of ancient Irish literature, or the preservation of the ancient Irish language. In seven years, during which this Society has been before the public, we have not succeeded in obtaining 500 subscribers, including those resident in England, in any one year, who have been willing to contribute an entrance fee of £3, and an annual subscription of £1, towards the objects of the Society; and yet, before the establishment of the Society, nothing was more common than declamations on the national disgrace of suffering our ancient Irish manuscripts to moulder in oblivion.

* Since the last Annual Meeting, twenty-five new members have been elected. Their names are as follows:

His Excellency the Earl of Clarendon.	Right Rev. Dr. Haly, R. C. Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin.
Lord John Manners.	Rev. James Hamilton.
Mons. Le Comte O'Kelly Farrell.	The Kildare-street Club.
Robert Archbold, Esq.	G. A. McDermott, Esq., F. G. S.
Rowland Bateman, Esq.	Right Rev. Dr. McNally, R. C. Bishop of Clogher.
Richard S. Bourke, Esq., M. P.	Robert Power, Esq.
W. H. Bradshaw, Esq.	*Rev. G. C. Renouard, B. D.
John William Browne, Esq.	John Reynolds, Esq., M. P.
*R. Clayton Browne, Esq.	*George Smith, Esq., F. R. S.
Rev. George Crolly.	Michael Staunton, Esq.
Rev. John Dunne.	Rev. Dr. Walsh.
Sir Thomas Esmonde, Bart.	The Very Rev. Dr. Yore, V. G. Dublin.
John Greene, Esq.

“ During the past year the Society has lost, by death, the following Members:

The Duke of Northumberland.	Daniel O'Connell, Esq., M. P.
The Earl of Bessborough.	The O'Conor Don., M. P.
Right Hon. Thomas Grenville.	William Potts, Esq.
*James Mac Cullagh, Esq.	Renny Sheehan, Esq.
Joseph Nelson, Esq., Q. C.	Rev. Robert Trail, D. D.

“ The number of Members now on the books of the Society amount to 458, of whom sixty-two are Life Members.

“ To show the progress of the Society, the Council think it right to lay before this Meeting the following tabular view of the number of Members on our books in each year since the commencement of our labours:

Year.	Annual Members.	Life Members.	Total.	Annual Increase.
1811	221	11	232
1812	239	19	258	26
1813	308	36	344	86
1844	337	48	385	41
1845	373	57	430	45
1846	383	60	443	13
1847	396	62	458	15

* Those to whose names an asterisk is prefixed are Life Members.

“ From this it appears that during the last two years the annual increase in the number of Members has been very considerably less than in any former year since the foundation of the Society; and although the unparalleled season of distress with which we have been visited during the past year, and the many calls upon the sympathies of the public, may, in part, account for this fact, yet it is greatly to be feared that this is not the whole cause, and that we are also to attribute the falling off to a very general apathy on the part of the Irish public to the objects for which the Society was founded.

“ This conclusion is strongly forced upon the Council by the fact, that a large number of the existing Members of the Society are in arrear of their subscriptions, and that the publications of the Society have, therefore, been greatly retarded for want of funds.

“ The Council, on the faith of promised subscriptions, did actually undertake several important works, some of which are in the Press, and some ready for publication. These they have been under the necessity of suspending, until the result of the present appeal to the Members of the Society is ascertained. And they have been further compelled to take the still more serious step of discontinuing their engagements with Mr. O'Donovan and Mr. Curry, gentlemen to whose indefatigable exertions and extraordinary acquirements in Irish literature and topography the Society and the learned world are already so deeply indebted.

“ Unpromising as the state of our affairs undoubtedly is, the Council are not without hope that the very statement of the facts may have the effect of calling forth the exertions of the friends of Irish literature, and averting the danger which threatens the very existence of the Society. If the Members who are in arrear would promptly pay up their subscriptions, all the existing difficulties of the Society would be removed, and the Council of the ensuing year would be enabled to carry on their labours with confidence and vigour.

“ The Council beg leave to recommend to the Society the adoption of two or three changes or modifications in our Fundamental Laws, which, if they receive your approval, may, it is hoped, bring in the subscriptions, and promote the general working of the Society.

“ By the seventh law it is enacted, that ‘ Any Member who shall be one year in arrear shall be considered as having resigned.’ Instead of these words the Council would propose to substitute the following: ‘ Any Member who shall be one year in arrear of his subscription shall be liable to be removed by the

the Council from the books of the Society, after due notice served upon him to that effect.'

“The Council recommend this change, because many Members have excused themselves from replying to the circulars, and other notices addressed to them by the Treasurer, on the ground that, being more than a year in arrear, they did not consider themselves as any longer Members, as the seventh Fundamental Law declared that they were to be regarded as having resigned. It was impossible, however, for the Council to act generally on so rigid an interpretation of this law, as they would thereby not only run the risk of giving unnecessary offence, but also, in some instances, deprive the Society of valuable and zealous Members, whose absence from the country, or some other accidental circumstance, had caused to fall into arrear. The obvious intention of the rule was merely to enable the Council to remove from the Society's books the names of such Members as had ceased to take an interest in its objects.

“The Council would also recommend the introduction of a rule which would enable them to nominate Vice-Presidents, who shall be ex officio Members of the Council. They would propose, therefore, to alter the second Fundamental Law to the following:

“‘The affairs of the Society shall be managed by a Council, consisting of a President, three Vice-Presidents, and twelve other Members, to be annually elected by the Society.’

“The Council propose this alteration, because the power of nominating Vice-Presidents will enable the Society to place upon the Council those whose zeal for the welfare of the Society has entitled them to that distinction, although their rank and public duties, or their absence from Dublin, render it impossible for them to be present at all the Meetings of the Council.

“It remains now to give some account of what has been done in reference to the publications of the Society since our last annual meeting. In the Report then laid before you it was stated that the funds at the disposal of the Council rendered it necessary to diminish very considerably the publications issued to Members in exchange for their subscriptions. It was proposed, however, to give to all Members who had subscribed for the year 1847, ‘The Irish Version of the Historia Britonum of Nennius, with a Translation and Notes by the Secretary, and additional Notes and an Introduction by the Hon. Algernon Herbert.’

vanced.* The delay has been occasioned in a great measure by the necessity of sending each proof sheet, for Mr. Herbert's remarks and corrections, to England; but principally by the discovery of a most interesting ancient historical poem, which was necessary to the illustration of the work, and which the Editor is now adding to it from a MS. of the twelfth century in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin.

“The Council will not anticipate the duty of the Editor by describing more particularly the nature of this document, or the reasons which have induced them to delay the publication for the sake of admitting it. They feel assured that every Member of the Society will agree with them in thinking that it was better to incur the delay than to bring out the work in a less perfect form; they have little doubt that the Historia of Nennius in its Irish dress, with the curious illustrations of British, Scottish, and Welsh history with which it is accompanied, will be received by the learned world as a valuable addition to the sources of British history.

“The disappointments experienced by the Council from the circumstances already referred to, render it impossible for them to say much on the subject of future publications. For an account of the works already undertaken, and partly in progress, they have nothing to add to what was said in the Report presented to the Society last year. They may add, however, that the Mucaria Eccidim, or Destruction of Cyprus, by Colonel Charles O'Kelly, is now completed, and ready for the press, and as soon as the funds at the disposal of the Council enable them to do so, it shall be placed in the hands of the printer. If any considerable portion of the arrears due to the Society should be collected, the Council would propose to give this work as the Society's publication for the year 1848.

“The Council have received from Mr. Shirley, the Rev. Mr. Graves of Kilkenny, Mr. O'Donovan, and other friends, some valuable contributions to the second volume of the Irish Archæological Miscellany; and they are in a condition, if funds permit, to bring out a fasciculus at least of this work during the ensuing year.

“Since the last meeting of the Society Mr. Reeves has published his Ecclesiastical

* The volume has been completed since the Annual Meeting was held, and is now in course of distribution to the Members.

siastical Taxation of the Dioceses of Down and Connor and Dromore, in a form exactly similar to the publications of this Society. This may be hailed as a satisfactory proof that the labours of the Society have excited in others, and in the public at large, a thirst for sound historical and topographical information. Mr. Reeves, it will be recollected, has undertaken to edit for the Society the whole of the important document, of which he has already brought out a part in the volume alluded to. We have no hope that the Society's funds will enable the Council to undertake this work for some time to come ; but it may, perhaps, be interesting to the Society to have on record the following account of his intended labours, with which Mr. Reeves has kindly furnished the Council :

“ ‘ Ecclesiastical Taxation of Ireland, A. D. 1306. Edited from the original Exchequer Rolls, London. By the Rev. WILLIAM REEVES, M. B., M. R. I. A., &c.

“ ‘ This Record notices all the dioceses of Ireland, and the several churches contained in them, arranged under rural deaneries, except the dioceses of Ferns, Ossory, and the upper part of Armagh. The deficiency, however, as far as regards Ossory, may be fully supplied from the Red Book of Ossory, in which are two taxations of the diocese, anterior to 1320. In the Registry of Primate Sweteman is contained a catalogue of the churches in the upper or county of Louth part of Armagh, of about the same date. So that Ferns is the only hiatus, for the repair of which there are no available materials.

“ ‘ Though the recital extends only to the names and incomes of the benefices, so that the notice of each occupies but a single line, the bare text would fill a volume nearly as large as any of those yet published by the Society. It is therefore proposed that the work should appear in four parts, containing severally an ecclesiastical province, with brief notes, identifying each name with the corresponding modern one on the Ordnance Map, and noticing such authorities as illustrate the ancient history and modern condition of the churches.

“ ‘ This arrangement will enable the Editor to put to press the first part, which is the province of Armagh, as soon as the Council think fit ; and at the same time avoid the inconvenience of swelling a single volume to such a size as to be unwieldy, or to monopolize the resources of the Society.

FUNDAMENTAL LAWS OF THE SOCIETY.

I. The number of Members shall be limited to 500.

II. The affairs of the Society shall be managed by a Council, consisting of a President, three Vice-Presidents, and twelve other Members, to be annually elected by the Society.

III. Those Noblemen and Gentlemen who have been admitted Members prior to the first day of May, 1841, shall be deemed the original Members of the Society, and all future Members shall be elected by the Council.

IV. Each Member shall pay four pounds on the first year of his election, and one pound every subsequent year. These payments to be made in advance, on or before the first day of January, annually.

V. Such Members as desire it may become Life Members on payment of the sum of thirteen pounds, or ten pounds (if they have already paid their entrance fee), in lieu of the annual subscription.

VI. Every Member whose subscription is not in arrear shall be entitled to receive one copy of each publication of the Society issued subsequently to his admission ; and the books printed by the Society shall not be sold to the Public.

VII. No Member who is three months in arrear of his subscription shall be entitled to vote, or to any other privilege of a Member ; and any Member who shall be one year in arrear of his subscription, shall be liable to be removed by the Council from the books of the Society, after due notice served upon him to that effect.

VIII. Any Member who shall gratuitously edit any book approved of by the Council, shall be entitled to twenty copies of such book, when printed, for his own use : and the Council shall at all times be ready to receive suggestions from Members relative to such rare books or manuscripts as they may be acquainted with, and which they may deem worthy of being printed by the Society.

IX. The Council shall have power to appoint officers, and to make by-laws not inconsistent with the Fundamental Laws of the Society.

X. No person shall be elected a Member of the Society until the entrance fee and subscription for the current year be paid to the Treasurer or one of the Local Secretaries.

Noblemen and Gentlemen desirous of becoming Members of the Irish Archæological Society are requested to forward their names and addresses to the Secretary, tary, Rev. Dr. Todd, Trinity College, Dublin. Literary Societies and public Libraries may procure the Society's publications by paying an admission fee of £3 and an annual subscription of £1, but without the privilege of compounding for the annual subscription.

XIV. The Topographical Poems of O'Heerin and O'Duggan ; with Notes by JOHN O'DONOVAN, Esq.

In addition to the foregoing projected Publications, there are many important works in the contemplation of the Council, which want of funds alone prevents the possibility of their undertaking, such as the Brehon Laws, the Dinnseanchus, the Feilire or Festilogium of Aengus the Culdee, the Annals of Connaught, the Annals of Tigernach, &c., &c.

1. The first part of the text discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions and activities. It emphasizes that this is crucial for ensuring transparency and accountability in the organization's operations.

2. The second part of the text focuses on the role of the management team in setting clear goals and objectives. It highlights that effective communication and collaboration are essential for the successful implementation of these goals.

3. The third part of the text addresses the need for regular monitoring and evaluation of the organization's performance. It suggests that this should be done through a combination of qualitative and quantitative measures to provide a comprehensive view of the organization's progress.

4. The final part of the text concludes by stating that the success of any organization depends on the commitment and dedication of its employees. It encourages a culture of continuous learning and improvement to ensure long-term success.
